LT hopes to top £40m surplus

By Michael Baily Transport Editor

London Transport reversed ears of decline last year with a £40m surplus by carrying more passengers by both bus and Underground, and achieving shorter waits at bus stops. It was its biggest profit in over 20

Performance could be even better this year and there are hopes that the capital's public transport system, helped both by more attractive fares and more effective management has at last arrested the decline and turned the corner towards an expanding future.

LT's new Travelcard, allowing unlimited travel for various periods on payment of a lump sum, has played a key part and a new £2 one-day Travelcard allowing unlimited travel after 10 am, will consolidate its success in 1985.

A drop from 14 to six per cent in lost bus miles was achieved, primarily because staff shortage has been eliminated and bus maintenance

The improved results allowed the Greater London Council's transport committee yesterday to adopt a new three-year plan for London Transport providing for a fares freeze until 1987, and a small increase in bus and Tube mileage - all at the current level of £190m a year revenue support and with no job losses. Mr Dave Wetzel, the chair-man of the committee, described the scheme yesterday as "an optimistic plan for the future, and for the people of London."

With London Transport due to be taken over by the Government this summer and the GLC to be abolished next year, he said: "This shows the GLC is not a licating its duties towards the people of London. We are still in charge, and this is the direction we intend LT to

Miners' strike begins

two-week coal strike is beginning to affect industry, although it may be some days before it starts to disrupt output seriously. The most threatened industries are steel and iron-founding, which rely on coke. West Midlands employers in engineering are worried.

The National Coal Board confirmed last nigt's that supplies of coke to iron foundries, which last year totalled 300,00 tonnes, have now dried up, and because companies in that sector tend to carry small stocks there could be early production cutbacks.

The situation at Scunthorpe is siad to be unique because all the other BSC plants can make coke from coal on site and coal stocks were said by the management last night to be adequate".

Scunthorpe relies on coke from South Yorkshire. Miners' pickets have stopped the movement of supplies by the two main rail unions.

Coal stocks, at other British Steel plants are thought likely to last for weeks rather than months.

Rate rises 'lowest on average for 10 years'

By Hugh Clayton Local Government

The average rate rises demanded from householders and businesses next month will be the lowest since the reorganization of local government 10 years ago, the Rating and Valuation Association said

Its survey, which it claimed was the most comprehensive issued so far, showed that the average increase in domestic rates in England and Wales will be 6.71 per cent. The commer-cial rate rise will be 5.86 per third of a slighly smaller sample of councils would spend in the coming year above the targets fixed by ministers. Spending above targets can bring penal-ties in the form of cuts in government contributions to local government spending

The increased harshness of penalties had made many councillors trim their spending plans, the association said.

In some cases a high-spend-ing council would have to spend £2.40 from ratepayers in order to spend an extra £1 on services. The other £1.40 would be cut from its central government grant as a penalty for spending the extra £1 above its target.

Mr Gerald Hodges, director of finance for Bradford City Council, said at a press conference held by the association in London that councils had kept their rate rises low by running down their balances. "We are being forced in my opinion to reduce our balances to unrealistic levels", he said. "I am apprehensive about next year. You have heard of creative accounting. But you can only use that sort of money

As Neil Heselton aged 12, recovered, a political battle was brewing over the future of the halt which he uses each day to take him to and from school in Towyn, Gwynedd. British Rail proposes to close Tonianau and two other halts along the line in an attempt to save £16,000 a year.

To strengthen the case, railway officials last week took a passenger survey of the balts to see how many people used the two trains a day which run each direction. But, with Neil tucked up in bed, no one used the trains British Rail says the wooden halts are decaying and repairs would cost £16,000. That could better spent on the route, which loses more than £1 million a year, BR maintains.

A spokesman said: "This does not indicate any lessening in our commitment to keep the line open. But these halts are becoming dangerous and from May 14 we are suspending the services to them while we apply for the necessary ministerial ent to close them.

Video-disc player prices cut by third

Philips, the consumer electronics company, has cut the prices of its Laservision videodisc players by almost a third, making their high-street price less than half the £500 launch price two years ago.

The price reduction is the third since Philips launched its revolutionary product and is meant to allow its machines to compete directly in price with the models produced by the United States company, RCA.

The sales campaign will include other European videodisc markets in Germany, Holland, France and Switze

Philips hopes to attract buyers and increase consumer acceptability of its products. The price cuts will be matched by a £2m advertising campaign, a new programme for dealers, a reduction in the price of some of the discs, and a doubling of the number of titles available from the present 420 titles in the video-disc library. which are pressed at the Philips factory at Blackburn, Lanca-

The new discounts will bring some discs down to under £10 from a top price of £18. Later in the year a new 8in disc, principally for music lovers, will be launched for about £8.

The 12in discs produce high-quality sound for two hours on two sides. Signals for the video are held in minute pits on the disc and are extracted by laser. Sales of home computer software have fallen dramatically since the start of the year, according to the Liverpoolbased researchers Gowling Marketing Services.

Since 1979, 11.3 million programs have been sold to home computer owners in the United Kingdom. That figure should rise by about 1.3 million by the end of this year, the researchers say, far short of the sales which some companies have predicted for 1984.

The cupboard was first published as an outstanding medieval survival in 1902 by F Roe in Ancient Coffers and Cupboards. He says that the piece was "recently discovered" in a remote part of Devon. Some of the grandest early oak furniture was made in Devon, in and around Exeter, a flourishing port, so that was a highly intelligent fake prove nance for the cupboard.

As a palimpsest of ancien and modern carving the piece is expected to sell tomorrow for about £3,000. If it were genuinely medieval, the price might be nearer £30,000. The discovery that the piece was a fake was the work of Mr Victor Chinnery, an expert on oak furniture and consultant to Sotheby's.

Six new TA infantry battalions announced

Further details of the plans to expand Britain's Territorial Army from 75,000 to 86,000 by 1990 were announced by Mr Michael Heseltine, Secretary of State for Defence, in the Commons. He stated that six new infantry battalions would be raised in North Yorkshire and Cleveland, Yorkshire, Greater Manchester and Cheshire, Devon and Cornwall. We plan to form for the first time a Territorial Army Corps Squadron, equipped with Scout helicopters We shall also form new logistic and support units, including an ord-nance unit in Bristol, a medical unit in Cambridge and a transport squadron in Wales.

We plan also to enhance the Territorial Army's equipment. The number of guns in Field Artillery regiments will be increased; the infantry will receive, along with its regular counterparts, the new antitank weapon Law 80 and new small arms. TA battalions in the 2nd infantry Division will be equipped with more mortars.

Our plans are to be implemented from 1986 onwards. They are set out in greater detail in an open Government document published today (Monday). These measures will significantly increase our conventional capa-bility, both in the United Kingdom and in Germany. They will strengthen the credibility of Nato's convernional deterrence. TRADE UNIONS

The Government was always talking about giving trade unions back to their members so it should allow trade unionists their rights over union election ballots, Mr John Smith, chief Opposition spokesman on employment, said in the Commons during the report stage of

However, Mr Tom King, Secretary of State for Employment, declared that the Bill was based on elementary principles of democracy the ability of people to mark paper to register their vote; to be able to have a voting paper supplied to them; to be able to have a fair and convenient opportunity to vote at voted fairly counted.

That, he said, was the sum total of what was taken to be gross interference in the democratic reedoms of trade unions.

The reaction of many of the public (he went on) would not be outrage at this gross imposition on decent, honest men and women, but amazement if they learnt that these were not conditions which already applied in trade unions. Mr John Smith said that the Bill.

Members of free and independent trade unions should decide their constitution for themselves without any help from Government or Parliament. They should be allowed to develop their organizations in their own way. That was the path of freedom. This Bill offered the path of Government regulation and compulsion. Trade unions must up their own minds about their own affairs. Mr Tom King, said that while procedures in many unions were of high order, anyone with any knowledge of the trade union and industrial situation well knew that there was a tremendous variety and difference in standards between some who pursued democratic procedures and others which fell a

It was an acid test of the genuineness of the Government's genumeness of the Government's unions back to their members because if that was its aim, there could be no argument again accepting the new clause.

Mr Spencer Batiste (Elmet, C) said the new clause should be examined against the current actions of the National Union of Mineworkers The claim by the Opposit that the constitution would be safe in the hands of the executive of the unions, but that was belied by what had happened.

The executive of the NUM and particularly its President, Mr Arthur Scargill, had used every conceivable constitutional loophole to avoid referring a national hallot to their mambers on the question of a strike. That was because the executive would not tike the result.

It was precisely in that way that certain trade union leaders would use their constitution to manipulate their members. Mr Gordon Brown (Dunfermline East, Lab) said the G

Mir David Evenaett (Erith and Crayford, C) said there was a start contrast between trade union members and their leaders. This Bill was an attempt to m unions more democratic and mor responsible.

Mr David Penhaligon (Truro, L) said he supported the general thrust of this part of the Bill as there was considerable justification behind the Government's general intent. But a union should be able to opt to waive the obligations of this section for five years if it held a secret postal ballot of all members and the showed them satisfied with the existing arrangements.

Whitehall brief

Reformer finds a testing laboratory

By Peter Hennessy

In his second floor office in 10 Downing Street in the spring of 1981. Mr (now Sir) John Hoskyns, the Prime Minister's senior policy adviser, reached a very private decision known only to his friend and colleague. Mr Norman Strauss, which was to have a very public impact. Once free of the rules that bound him as a temporary civil servant, he would "blow-the-whistle" on Whitehall.

Three years and two stinging public lectures (one going for the civil servants, the other for ministers) later, he has found a laboratory in which to test his theory that a new strategy for government is necessary if lasting economic recovery is to be achieved, a strategy which cannot be developed without a substantial transfusion of new men and new methods into Whitehall. From July 1, the Institute of Directors, a mere stone's throw across the Mall from the heart of government, will be a citadel of what is known in Whitehall as "Hoskynry". As its next director-general, Sir John says that he will move cautiously and will not try to pre-empt institute policy. But the institute knew what it was buying. Sir John used the institute's annual lecture last September to launch a blunt attack on politicians under the title "Conservatism is not enough". By the end of the year it should be clear if he has succeeded, and very few expect him to fail, in persuading the institute's council that Whitehall reform is a precondi-tion of many of the changes it wants to see in the British basiness climate. Sir John waited five months after leaving No 10 in April, 1982, before issuing his first blast on the whistle in a lecture to the Institute for Fiscal Studies called "Westminster and Whitehall: An Outsider's View". To his great relief the permanent secretaries, serving and retired, responded by taking to the lecture halls themselves: silence could have snuffed out his message. Since then, the Hoskyns factor has been a persistent theme of higher Civil Service discussion. He has had two private meetings with the First Division Association, the top officials' union. Asked if Sir John had had an impact, Mr John Ward, its general secretary, said last week: "Absolutely. Very much so. "When they first heard what he was saying senior civil servants were outraged. But

All in all, it has been a remarkable example of the trickle-down effect of ideas in politics, given the arcane nature of the subject and the lack of public interest in the recent past (in January he aired his thesis on BBC television's Question Time). But the politicians, with one notable exception, have been silent.

Sir John last week described Dr Owen's remarks as "a breath of fresh air". They gave him hope that Whitehall reform could be an issue at the next general election, But silence from the Conservatives has been a problem, mainly because of the attitude of his old boss, Mrs Margaret Thatcher.

The people who fought so long for community care are suddenly anxious that the policy is being used as an excuse for cash cuts.

The numbers of mentally iil in hospitals fell from 154,000 in 1954 to 70,000 last year. Among every 10,000 people in England and Wales, 17 have been discharged from a mental hospital, but only one has found his or her way into local authority care.

The Department of Health and Social Security has repeatedly recognized the need for planning and funds. A 1981 consultative document, Carc in the Community, led to improved joint funding to encourage social services and health authorities to provide hostels, group homes and day centres, but the authorities have proved Accommodation is not the only problem. Of the few who do reach local authority care now, only 20 per cent are cared for by trained staff.

Despite the alarm, Mind, the largest mental health pressure group, remains firmly the policy. Mr Simon Hebditch, a national director, says freedom for ill people to develop their own lives outside institutions implies a necessary level of risk. "Perhaps that is a price we have to pay," he says. Last year's Mental Health Act reinforced the 1959 law, saying people cannot be committed to a mental hospital unless they are a danger to themselves or

Angola deal and Pretoria pact cause Moscow acute unease

From Richard Owen, Moscow

Both the South African agreement with Mozambique and Cuba's recent agreement with Angola have caused acute unease in Moscow, which sees the latest turn of events as a blow to Soviet influence.

Western and African diplo-mats said Mozambique's nonaggression treaty with Pretoria, signed on March 16. was a particular setback for the Soviet Union, "The sight of a smiling Samora Machel shaking hands with Mr Botha did not please the Russians one little bit," one diplomat commenced. diplomat commented.

Moscow has always regarded Angola and Mozambique as its Marxist allies in black Africa. The Russians have also taken a close look at the related South African-Angolan agreement on the disengagement of South African forces from Angolan territory and Pretoria's undertaking not to attack Swapo (South West African People's Organization) guerrilla base inside Angola.

All these moves - coupled with hints that Luanda might even neutralize Dr Savimbi by coming to terms with him -have brought forth a barrage of attacks on South Africa in the Soviet media designed to remind black Africa that "tac-tics apart, the bruial essence of the racists remains unchanged" as Tass put it on Sunday. The Soviet argument is that Pretoria is only flirting with the frontline states while seeking to force them into submission, with the backing of the US.

Gulf war helps the Kurds to fight on

If anyone could be said to have benefited directly from the three and a half years of war between Iran and Iraq, it must be the Kurds, an ancient nation of some 20 million people, mainly bill farmers astride the borders of Turkey, the Soviet Union, Iran, Iraq and Syria.

As a result, about 10,000 miles of the western mountains and valleys of Iran are still beyond the reach of Aytoliah Khomeini five years after his revolution. Similarly, the northern mountains of Iraq are outside the control of President Saddam Husain 23 years after a rebellion was started there by the late Kurdish leader, Gen-

The merest reference to the name of the Kurds continues to be a serious offence, let alone the speaking of Kurdish or any encourage-ment of the Kurds' political aspirations.

Sir Geoffrey Howe, the foreign Secretary, will point out that Britain in fact has agreed to a change in the way its net contribution to the Community is defined. scher, the West German Foreign Minister, has a meet-ing at the weekend with Sir Jock Taylor, the British Ambassador, as cautious optimism was being voiced in political circles here that the crisis in the European Community could still be overcome. Herr Genscher was evidently intent on clearing up what he saw as a misunderstanding of the West German position at the Brussels summit. Meanwhile, Herr Peter Boenisch, the Government spokesman, rejected British press criticism of chancellor Kohl at the summit, and said the report in The Observer laying much of the blame for the breakdown at the Germans' door, and widely quoted here was "incorrect in this form". He said Herr Kohl did not present his compromise pro-posal until after the British had

US masses troops for Honduran exercise

From Christopher Thomas Washington

The United States is about to embark on huge military exercises in Honduras in a stepped-up campaign of intimidation directed against Cuban-supported left-wing guerrillas in Central America. It will be President Reagan's most assertive military move in the region.

The manoeuvers, code-named Granadero I, will make America's presence felt throughout the region during a period of post-election tensions in El Salvador, which went to the polls on Sunday. The Americans feel there may soon be a renewed push by left-wing Salvadorean guerrillas.

There will also be large-scale American exercises in the Caribbean, code-named Ocean Venture 84, between the Marine Corps, the Air Force, Army and Navy. They will last for two weeks from April 20. King Juan Carlos to visit Russia

From Harry Debelius Madrid

King Juan Carlos and Queen Sophia of Spain will pay an official visit to the Soviet Union, probably in May, diplomatic sources confirmed here yesterday.

It will be the first visit on record by a Spanish head of state to the Soviet Union. Although the source did not specify whether Madrid or Moscow took the initiative in preparing the trip, it is clear for protocol reasons that the King and Queen would not go officially without receiving an invitation.

The official announcement of the visit has not yet been made and is not expected to be made until after the appointment of a new head of the Soviet state which is expected soon.

A royal visit was first discussed by both countries as long as six years ago, but there were repeated delays in fixing an appropriate date.

Relatively recent develop-ments which temporarilt stalled the trip were the death of President Andropov, and before that tensions arising from the incident in which the Soviet Air Force shot down a South Korean airliner last year.

Both before and after Mr Andropov's death the Spanish Government received assur-ances that the King and Queen would be welcome, and that by May a Soviet head of state would be named. This is important since for protocol reasons he would officially

Dangerous in high office

None of this directly affects the President. Nobody is alleging any personal wrong-doing on his part. But the episode may come to affect him indirectly. He is a man who repays loyalty with loyalty, but while this is an admirable personal trait it is dangerous in high office when it takes precedence over objective stan-dards and general principles of good government.

Mr Reagan is acting entirely in character. He is very much an anecdotal person, moved by individual people and particu-lar events. Mr Meese is a man in whom he has placed great trust over the years, so the President will stick by his friend when he is in trouble. So long as the trouble is not too serious Mr Reagan will not suffer. But if much mud sticks to Mr Meese the President will find himself accused of indulg-ing private friendship at the Already the Democrats are alleging that this is but the latest example of a sleazy Administration. It is said that some 40 people have been forced to leave on grounds of misconduct of one sort or another. The accusation that Mr Reagan will need to guard against is that, for all his generosity to old friends, he is careless in preserving those standards of clean government which it is his duty to uphoid.

There are some Republicans who see this clearly enough now. They foresee the danger of this episode dragging on for months with the Administration on the defensive and the agenda of politics turned to its disadvantage. The focus of attention would be not on the strength of the President, the appeal of his personality or the achievements of his first term, but on the ethical standards of his team. The issue of "Debategate" - the alleged theft of the Carter briefing papers before the television debate in 1980 might be reopened.

Administration now of his own free will. Theyy do not believe that he will do so, nor that Mr Reagan can be persuaded at this stage to ask him to withdraw. reasons of political discretion, five years after the signing of the peace treaty, no mention is made of the fact that an Arab airline is flying regularly to Israel.

In similar vein, the Israeli Government had a pavilion at this month's international trade fair in Cairo. With the Star of David fluttering, all appeared remarkably normal, until de-pressed-looking Israeli exhibitors (those few who could be persuaded to take part) ex-plained that import licences were not being granted.

Both examples are sympto-matic of the skilful way in which the government of President Mubarak is sticking no way of telling from the faithfully to the letter of the departures board that its treaty, while at the same time destination is Tel Aviv. For doing nothing to encourage the spirit of full-hearted cooperation that Israel had once hoped for.

"What you have is an armistice which is working very well, a few economic and other contacts and that is about all", an envoy in Cairo said. "Given the invasion of Lebanon and Egypt's position in the Arab world, it is hard to see how, in present circumstances, Israel can expect anything more."

The diplomat represented one of the 10 nations participating in the multinational peace force in the Sinai, the last segment of which was handed back by Israel in April 1982. The force is known locally as "the forgotten army because of the refreshing lack of incidents between the two

Despite the smoothness of the Sinai operation, there is deep resentment about the prace treaty among ordinary Egyptians - not necessarily the majority - which the Israelis fear may well be exploited in the Egyptian general election due in May.

During my visit to Cairo, the mease was forcefully expressed by a retired schoolmaster who was a strong supporter of President Mubarak and who showed few signs of radicalism. "Why should I ever consider going to Israel after what they have done to the Palestinians? I would rather visit any other place in the world."

Mr Mohammed Heikal, the prominent journalist, former Mr Heikal and other Egyptian confidant of President Nasser intellectuals - including a and bitter critic of President confident prediction that the spread attitude of many Egyptians towards the peace. "Now that they have got the Sinai back, they do not really want to know anything more about it. There is a general sense of guilt about the treaty."

Mr Heikal spoke bitterly of the presence of Israelis in the flat below his, the headquarters of the small Israeli Academic Centre in Cairo. He told proudly of how he had turned down the opportunity of a meeting with Mr Abba Eban -one of Israel's more dovish politicians - which had been arranged for him by a Washington columnist

The outspoken criticism by Mr Heikal and other Egyptian cultural agreement with Israel will not be renewed when it expires - tended to confirm many of the fears by the Israeli Government about the chances of any imminent improvement in relations. But, judging from comments by members of the Egyptian hierarchy and of diplomats who have been monitoring the peace treaty since 1979, it does not necessarily mean that the first pact between Israel and an Arab state is at risk, or will be in the foreseeable future. From the point of view of President Mubarak, "the Cold

Peace" has permitted him to perform a diplomatic balancing act more successfully than most people had expected.

A touch of magic

Literally at your fingertips—a comprehensive telephone system, data retrieval, computer access and telex. All at the touch of a finger on the monitor surface of this unique terminal.

The British Telecom-designed City
Business System is a runaway success.
More than 900 screens are already in use, orders worth over £10 million in hand, including exports to the US, Europe,
Middle East and Hong Kong.

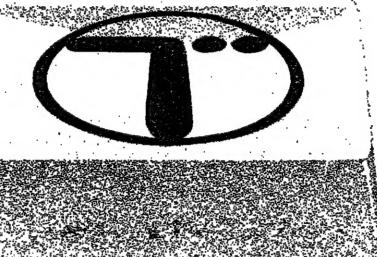

System X-digital flexibility.

A'slice' of the modular microprocessor circuitry that enables System X-Britain's advanced new electronic telephone exchanges—to adapt, quickly and simply, both to customers' requirements and to technological progress.

Digital techniques pack more communications power into far less space. Equally at home in data, facsimile and video transmission as well as conventional speech, they open wide the door to the electronic office of the future.

System X means faster call connection, improved clarity and many new facilities for business and private customers.

Up she rises!

Coming ashore in Cornwall, British Telecom's newest transatlantic cable.

Carrying over 4000 simultaneous telephone calls, it provides the world's first full-colour digital transatlantic video conferencing service.

In Britain, every telephone customer can personally dial 135 countries, covering 93% of the world's telephones.

Sadly, this facility is not always twoway. For example, you yourself can dial Dallas, Beverly Hills or Washington DC in the United States. But, customers in these populous places have to go through the operator for calls outside the US.

Healthy growth
British Telecom, one of Britain's largest businesses:

-opens 4 modern exchanges every week.
-runs the World's 5th largest phone system.

-will soon install Britain's 20 millionth phone line.

It demands less maintenance, while sensitive built-in detectors swiftly pinpoint network faults.

In the next three years British Telecom plans 30 more System X trunk units and 1200 local exchanges.

A vast investment in efficiency, economy and progress for Britain.

British Telecom has now launched SatStream North America—the world's first satellite-based, all-digital transmission service across the Atlantic.

This is beamed by another world first—a new compact dish aerial based on principles established by James Gregory, a 17th century Scottish mathematician.

Señor Javier Pérez de Cuella, the UN Secretary General, has asked the Turks to hand over Famagusta's Greek quarter of Varosha to the United Nations, so that its 40,000 Greek Cypriot inhabitants can return to their homes after living as refugees for a decade.

The Secretary General wants the surrender of Varosha as a from of amends for the Turkish Cypriot unilateral declaration of an independent state in the occuped north of the island last November. The action was fromally condemned by the Security Council and most countries of the world.

The surrender to the UN of part of Varosha, to be held in wond pending a final settement of the Cyprus problem, had been proposed by Mr Rauf Denktas, the Turkish Cyprot leader, soon after the declar ation of independence, as a gesture to the Greek Cyprots. The offer, however, was conditional and no refugees would be allowed to settel in the deserted city until a final settlement was achieved. But the Greek Cypriots refused to resume a dialogue until the unilateral declaratin of independence was rescinded.

The Secretary-General is trying to get the Turkish Cypriots to give up all conditions and enlarge the area offered so that, first, access from the Greek sector would be ensured (not via the British sovereign base), and secondly, that the part of the town where the old municipal office was located would also be returned. Under Senor Pérez de Cuel-

Perhaps the most firmly kept viewing appointment of the week at present is on Fridays for the P. D. James serial Shroud for a Nightingale. Now in its fourth week, it is increasingly dominated by the redoubtable Detective Chief Superintendent Dalgleish, played with steely authority by Roy Marsden. Since its predecessor, Death of an Expert Witness, which won audiences of 11 million last year, Dalgleish has been dubbed the thinking man's detective or, more exactly, the crime fan's thinking detective. With Marsden's embodiment of Dalgleish, the television copper

It is as significant a change in its way as the superseding of the fatherly Dixon of Dock Green by the hard-bitten working-class coppers of Z-Cars and their spiritual descendants right down to The Sweeney. Dalgleish comes from a different force certainly a different stratum, one that wears a waistcoat and does not raise its voice.

P. D. James described Adam Dalgleish, but there are very few clues in the books to his appearance, other than that he is tall. Roy Marsden, who is oft 3in, had, she felt, "the right kind of masculinity combined with sensitivity".

Always meticulous in preparation, Marsden called on the help of a boyhood friend at Scotland Yard to find him models. He discovered that there were senior officers at the Yard who sported button-holes or kept a slim volume of poetry in the office. Invited to social get-togethers, he was able to observe the physical characteristics of senior detectives.

He talks of the change of police style in the Eighties, under a Commissioner like Sir Kenneth Newman; the television image of aggressively macho, perhaps none-too-scrupulous, methods is changing too. They wouldn't let us show Scotland Yard when we were filming The Sandbaggers but last year we were welcome to use the building, inside or out. "At the end there is hair an hour of epilogue about his involved feelings - a new departure but not I think, an anti-climax". says Marsden.

"But my prime task is to tell the story as clearly as possible. If the secondary levels of the character are brought into play, that is a bonus. With P. D. James, unlike Agatha Christie for instance, there is no withholding of information which alone can provide the solution. The audience are given all the information they need. Six-year drought brings disaster to Brazil

Recife (NYT) - A severe is causing devastation across north Eastern Brazil, but bureaucratic problems and a feeling of national embarrassment appear to be standing in the way of much-needed inter-

Although this poor and emiarid region has long suffered from dry spells, the present disaster in nine northeastern Brazitian states is considered the worst in the country's recorded history, with almost total loss of crops in the area in the last year. Foreign aid experts here are comparing the harm done to haman life and nature to that caused by the current great drought in sub-Saharan Africa. It is killing adolts and children, cattle and crops, and tens of thousands continue to flee the area. Members of a team from the International Committee of the Red Cross told diplomats on a recent visit that they had seen severe and irreversible medical damage on a large scale. They said that in recent months infant mortality rates in some of the worst areas had jumped to 250 deaths per 1,000 births, higher than almost anywhere else in the world. According to the Govern-ment, the drought has affected in some way 25 million of the more than 30 million people living in the region, as many as the entire population of Central America.

Of those 25 million people, the Government believes 15 million are suffering directly from hunger and thirst. The nine states affected are Bahia. Sergipe, Alagoas, Pernambuco, Paraiba, Rio Grande, Do Norte, Ceara, Piani and Maranhao, which hold a quarter of Brazil's 128 million

With the nation's economy in the worst crisis in memory, the Government, led bt President João Baptista Figueiredo, has neither the means nor the political will to cope adequately with the disaster, according to government officials, foreign aid experts and diplomats. They said the feeling of national embarrassment and disagreement among senior officials had prevented the Government from asking for international aid. Some officials believe the need for belp is urgent, but the Government itself has not made any official request abroad for food. Asked why Brazil had not sought international help, Senhor Salmito, coordinator of the country's relief effort, said: "It is humiliating to ask for food. It's an ambarrassing situation because Brazil is the fourth largest producer of grains in the world.

Complaining about a lack of drastic action from the Government, several opposition legis-lators have announced that they will start their campaign to seek food from foreign donors.

I heard someone say of the Royal Academy recently, And indeed it is quite remarkable that The Genius of Venice should be not quite down from the walls when another show as ambitious as The Orientalists opens. But minds should be cleared of any idea that it is a comparable blockbuster of a show, or it will be found disproportionately disappointing. Some disappointment seems to be in order anyway, partly at least through circumstances, as they say, beyond the organizers' control, for how could they know that lastminute legal complications would hold in thrall no fewer than 18 key works? Serviceable substitutes have been rustled up from various local sources, including galleries which have particularly interested themselves in European artists' reactions to the Near East, such as the Mathaf and the Fine Art Society. But the show still seems currously lopsided.

The trouble is that the subject probably should have been given blockbuster treatment, or, on this scale, a specific aspect of the subject should have been sciented for more detailed examination,

The story of European artists' imaginative involvement with the world of Islam is long and complicated, with many different national subplots and variations in the degree of contact with reality which was thought necessary or appropri-ate. A show of this size can cover it only very sketchily, and whatever selection it makes is bound to seem arbitrary in relation to all the things that might have been selected and

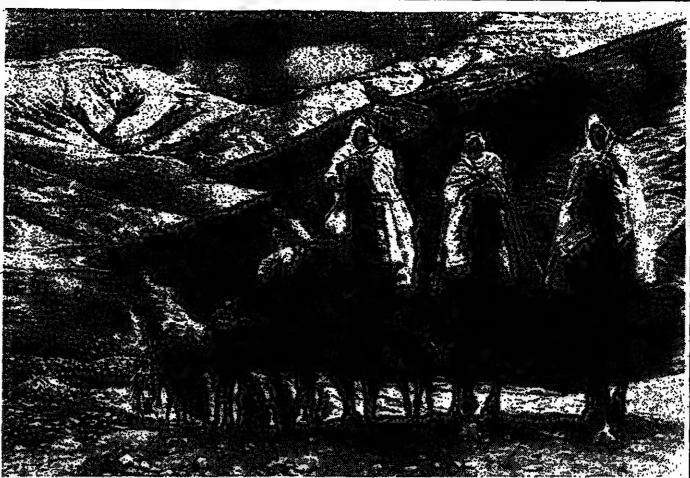

The scope of the show is defined as "Delacroix to Matisse", though one of catalogue essays gives it, more accurately, as "Bonaparte to T. E. Lawrence". Certainly Napoleon's Egyptian expedition fuelled the imagination of the West, and Lawrence's retirement into the hopeful anonymity of Aircraftman Ross marked the end of a particularly innocent, romantic view of the Middle East. It is significant that the two western countries invoked are France and Britain, since the show is really dominated by them - particularly France. There are, in fact, quite a few too many rather dull midnineteenth-century French academic works by the likes of Guillaumet and Gleyre, the oils in particular creating an unnecessarily gloomy effect through the apparent French unwillingness to clean anything. But what, you might say, of

seen after this London airing which achieved the same kind (which continues until May 27) of dazzling last-minute transat the National Gallery in Washington. (This other verunderwent with Matisse's visits sion of the show is rather to Morocco when Klee and Macke went to Tunis in 1914? Virtually nothing, even before the last-minute reduction. And how about the surprising Italian school of virtuoso watercolourists, who are totally ignored? And indeed, if Matisse is allowed in as the rwentieth-century end of the line, surely Kice has an equal right?

Should you wish to find out some more about these other national variations on an oriental, or at least an orientalizing theme, it would be well worth your while to look in at the Mathaf Gallery, 24 Motthe Mathal Gallery, 24 Mot-comb Street, Belgravia, where the spring exhibition of Orien-talist Paintings of the 19th Century includes excellent examples of such Germans as Ernst, Deutsch, Kosler, Von Meckel and Haag, as well as Italians like Giulio Rosati and Gustavo Simoni and even Danish and Spainish orientalists (Simonsen and Gallegos y Arnosa respectively). Similar byways, as well as the highroad to the East, are helpfully documented and extravagantly illustrated in Lynne Thornton's timely volume The Orientalists, 1828-1908 Painter-Travellers (ACR Edition; £40).

To return to the Academy, and what is in it rather than what is not, it must at once be said that, even if the exhibition does not hold together very well as an exhibition, there is a sufficiency of interesting and extraordinary painting to make a visit well worthwhile. The hero of the occasion seems by general consent to be John Frederick Lewis, who not only had ample real experience of living in Cairo but possessed also a gift of rare refinement for making over his experience into expressive works of art which, even at a considerable distance from the actual observation (hecame back to England in 1851, and continued to paint from his-old sketchbooks for the remaining 25 years of his life), retained freshness and precision of the treshness and precision of his work done on the spot. Evidently he had a genuine, unpatronising sympathy with Islam and Islamic ways of life, and his oils The Hosh (Courtyard) of the House of the Coptic Patriarch, Cairo (in fact his own house), are as lively as house) are as lively as more familiar watercolours like the Victoria and Albert's The Hhareem, a last-minute replacement but nonetheless welcome.

The Gérômes, though depleted, remain the most im-pressive of the classic French works, while the group of Renoirs (all except one painted before he had visited North Africa himself) remind us of a lesser-known side of his talents, and the Matisses still carry with them a sharp sense of the revelation of light and colour the artist received in Morocco. Visitors to The Pre-Raphaelites at the Tate will no doubt welcome the chance to see the other version of Holman Hunt's The Asterglow of Egypt just a short tube-ride away, especially since it is accompanied by a copious selection of Hunt's watercolours from the Holy Land and a fine unfamiliar selfportrait in vaguely oriental attire which comes from the Uffizi, of all places. And chances to see examples of Tissor's religious paintings like The Journey of the Magt, or such a striking Brangwyn as A Trade on the Beach (retrieved for the moment from the Musée d'Orsay), are rare enough not to be sneezed at

Oddly enough, there are no orientalist works in the show of French Paintings from 1800 to 1850 at Hazlitt, Gooden and Fox, 38 Bury Street, St James's, until April 19; given the period covered, there might well be, but the nearest we come is a rather surprising oriental figure in the middle of Jean-Achille Benouville's Le Colisee vu du Palatin (1844). But for those who can feel content with the folies hourgeoises and Biedermeier delights of such paintings as Pierre Duval-Lecamus's Portrait d'un homme dans un interieur or Anthelme-François Lagrenée's Portrait presumé de l'architecte Woronikhine et de sa famille or Comte Alexandre-François-Louis de Giradin's Portrait d'un inventeur (it looks as though he invented a fireengine). there are rewards enough. And the unfamiliar names tells their own tale: as usual with this gallery, the taste is not only immaculate, but gloriously unbackneyed.

Over the road at the Bury Street Gallery there is another delightfully unfamiliar collection, Some Danish Paintings of the Nineteenth Century (until April 19). Perhaps half the show exemplifies the same sort of Biedermeier taste as the French paintings, with the peculiarly local addition of a group of wonderfully precise, simple, almost but not quite naive flower-pieces for which the only word is Schubertian, Most of the rest come from two late nineteenth-century painters in the immediate circle of that intimist master Hammershoi: Peter Ilsted was his brother-inlaw and Carl Hoison a close friend. They both paint rather similar subjects: cool, greytoned interiors or just-exteriors (porches and courtyards and views looking into windows instead of looking out), with human figures regarded almost as part of the furniture, when they are present at all. Neither has quite the magic of Hammershoi, but at moments in this show they come very close.

Concert Endymion Ensemble Rosslyn Hill Chapel

Harrison Birtwistle has always had the softness of Satie as well as the violence of Varese. Sunday night's concert by the Endymion Ensemble, part of their admirable Birtwistle series, brought out this gentle side of his character, this ability to write music that seems to be waiting, not without tension, for something to happen. In Dinah and Nick's Love Song, for three soprano saxophones and harp, the waiting is all, but the new Duets for Storab for flutes create out of expectancy a little musical landscape of games, pastorals, elegies and fanfares.

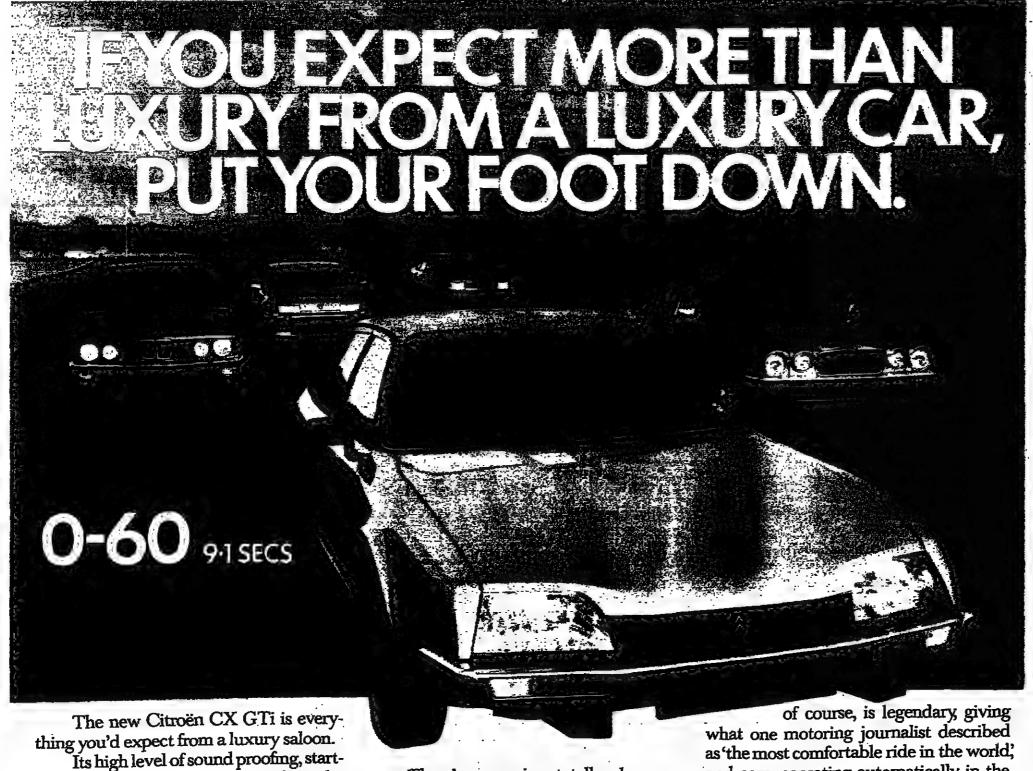

This is Birtwistle working in silverpoint. He takes the me-dium as an invitation to write scrupulously and economically for two voices which are alternatives, reflections or shadows, pacing one another in a charming gyration. Pulse, as ever in recent Birtwistle, is crucial; and sometimes the effect of the two players coming out of irregular canon into a unison is curiously willy.

So too, in a different way, is the construction of the six short movements as different views through the same kaleidoscope of ideas, displaying that re-peated refocusing and regeneration that has been a feature of Birtwistle's music from the start, as we were reminded by a vividly-drawn performance of Entractes and Sappho Fragments with Penelope Walmsley-Clark as soloist.

What is new in the ducts is the cool, early-morning atmosphere, which apparently was prompted by the composer's residence on the island of Raasay in the Hebrides.

Besides the Birtwistle, there were three pieces by young composers, of which far and away the most impressive was Peter Seabourne's Jabberwocky. A mixture of hobbling dances, over-brave concords complete with swooping harp glissandos and other such thorough gro-tesques, this is hardly a mature conception, but in execution it was remarkably assured for a composer still in his early

Portsmouth health authority is trimming its costs by, among other things, sending NHS patients to private hospitals. Is this the shape of the health service of the future?

Nicholas Timmins reports

Take a health authority in these difficult cost-cutting days for the NHS. Ask it to close 11 of its 16 hospitals over the next 15 years. Tell it to put not just its catering, laundry and cleaning out to private tender, but to consider whether some of its nursing and physiotherapy might not be better provided by the private sector as well.

Then ask it to spend £100,000 next year treating NHS patients in private hospitals. Finally, telf it that to achieve its dreams, it must make savings not of half a per cent here or there, but of at least 10 per cent of its budget over the next decade or so, to provide capital

Sit back, and wait for the howls of protest to drown out any possibility of

Yet that is what Portsmouth and South East Hampshire Health Authority is planning. And it is planning it not because the Department of Health has instructed it to do so, but largely of its own volition.

It all this sounds like a manifesto for Roy Griffiths (the managing director of Sainsbury's brought in by Norman Fowler to shake up NHS manage-ment), and equally like a nightmare for those who want to place the NHS on an inviolate pedestal, then that, pretty much, is what it is.

The philosophy behind it is put simply by Dr Martin Hardman. consultant paediatrician at St Mary's, one of the district's two general hospitals. "It is", he says, "a question of self-help."

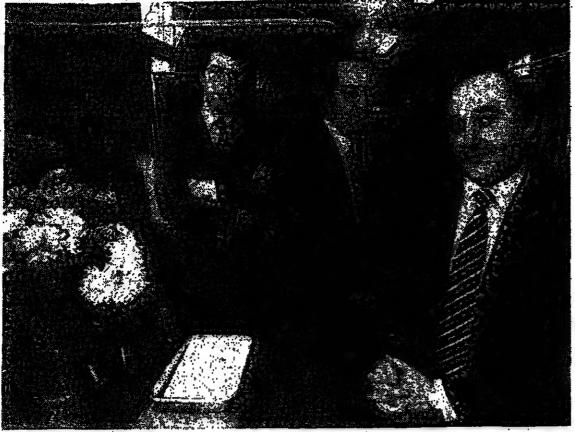

"We are seeing what we can do ourselves to improve our health service, rather than waiting for the region or the DHSS to bail us out."

Portsmouth is in many ways a typical health authority. Geographically it is compact, stretching from Portsmouth to Petersfield and from Fareham and Gosport to Havant, At from its budget is on the large side, but its income per head is about the national norm.

In other ways it is far from typical. lts district administrator, 39-year-old Chris West, is one of the few business graduates in the NHS. His attitudes derive more from the Harvard Business School approach to management than the muddle and make-do image often held by public sector administration.

With Ian Carruthers, his deputy, and Max Millett, the district personnel officer, he runs a triumvirate of managers whose approach to cash limits and cuts is closer to that of the three musketeers than to the people who see nothing but doom and gloom around the corner for the NHS.

If there are problems and opportunities, they see them as something to be seized rather than wring their hands in horror. The result is a three-pronged attack.

The first aim is to cut costs now,

where they can be cut. This year

The second target for the authority, is to put its domestic, catering and laundry services out to private tender, something the Department of Health is demanding that all health authorities do. But it is also reviewing a whole range of other services from administration to nursing, physiotherapy, care for the elderly and surgery. All will be audited, the demands in them assessed, their manpower and working practices examined, and their real costs worked out. That done, the question will be asked: "Should they be tested against the commercial sector?"

The programme is a long-term one the drive, Portsmouth has spent but has, needless to say, horrified £25,000 on 10 hip transitiants at the King Edward VII private hospital in Midhurst. many, including the unions. In practice few if any of these services are likely to be privatized wholesale.

> But Ian Carruthers argues that this kind of questioning provides a remarkable stimulus to those services asked to examine how well they are being run at the moment - and there might be areas on the edges where the private sector would be cheaper.

Already a review of community services has identified savings of up to £250,000 over three years by basing the service in one headquarters instead of four separate rented sites, and by shedding over 20 clerical posts by natural wastage. Next year Chris West from administrative and support The experiment will show. Chris services, money that will be transferred to patient care. The third prong of Chris West's strategy is a wholesale review of the long-term aims of the district.

Instead of planning development piecemeal, the authority has asked a much more fundamental question. It has looked at what its revenue is likely to be by the year 2000 and how much capital it is likely to get. It has asked, "given a blank sheet of paper, what and Ian Carrothers. the men behind the Portsmouth efficiency plans. Above: Patient Clifford Hanson Porter at Midhurst

ideally would we provide with those monies?". It has then said, "how do we get from here to there?".

The answer sounds alarming - close 11 of its 16 hospitals over the years, many of which are small, much-loved and in attractive buildings. But they are in sparsely populated areas and are expensive and inefficient to run.

In return the district gets three new community hospitals in more heavily populated Petersfield. Fareham and Havant, and gets funds to develop community services for the old, mentally ill and handicapped, and to improve its acute services.

A key factor in the plans is proposed with Haslar, the Royal Navy hospital in Gosport. This has just had a £12m development and can offer five new operating theatres and six empty wards that the NHS could use. The hospital already treats some NHS patients on a 'grace and favour" basis. Chris West's solution is to use that investment of taxpayers' money to the NHS's advantage, by allowing Haslar to provide support services and NHS doctors to operate in the under-used theatres.

One headquarters will save £250,000

The package contains a promise that no hospital will close until its replacement is open, and that no services will be cut.

The proposals have been out for consultation for three months and Chris West and Ian Curruthers have attended over 100 meetings of staff and public, some 300-strong and overflowing at the doors, to sell the idea. There has been a wealth of criticism and fears, a surge of "save our hospital" campaigns, but also a surprising amount of support.

Some of it has come from a small but influential group of consultants who have seen the harsh realities of health service budgeting through service on the district management

Mr Peter Fenion, a consultant opthalmologist at Queen Alexandra's Hospital, says that faced with intractable waiting lists consultants are

"What the public doesn't seem to understand about Chris West's proposals is that there is a real opportunity here to improve things. We can close down old hospitals with high overheads, build modern ones in their place and give a better service."

developing the confidence to say, "If we can save a bit here, we can spend a

To achieve the rebuilding, the district needs about £62m capital. On current plans it expects about £39m by the year 2000 from the region. Perhaps £17m to £20m will come from selling off the hospitals it plans to close. That leaves a gap of £3m to £6m - up to 10 per cent of its budget.

Chris West says, "Between now and 2000, assuming no growth at all, we will spend about £1 billion in revenue. If we can't save three to six million out of that, then management isn't manag-

Far from everyone in Portsmouth is happy at what is happening. Bob Abberley, regional officer of the health service union COHSE, says the service is already inadequate, and that while savings have to be made, "there is only so much surplus. Sooner or later you will be cutting into bone. Ultimately there is not enough money coming into the NHS and there won't be enough to meet the demands". The Govern-ment's privatization drive is souring traditionally good industrial relations in the district. "We are on the edge of a precipice in our relationship with local management."

Even the "three musketeers" have some reservations. Max Millett, the personnel officer, says he would far rather avoid privatizing services if possible. Directly employed staff are likely to be more dedicated, and some existing staff after 35 years loyal service may find themselves with a frozen pension, and possibly no job. "I have great sympathy for that.'

But given the economic outlook and the pressure on health budgets around the world, he says, "It will not matter much which government is in power. To a greater or lesser degree we would have to be doing the same thing. What we are doing today, everyone is going to have to do sooner or later."

PARIS FASHION

One week into the Paris collections and 41 shows later, the dramatic climax is yet to come. This morning, the extrovert, irreverent and maverick designer Karl Lagerfeld unveils his first own-label collection an event awaited with as much relish as the first asparagus of Tomorrow, the reclusive, sensitive, intellectual Yves Saint Laurent, French fashion's uncrowned king, will bring the collections to a close with a show designed to up-stage the pretender to his throne.

This duel of egos is much more than rivalry between two designers and their fanatical followers. Behind it lies a challenge to the French concept of high fashion.

Saint Laurent's success is rooted in haute couture, in the imperial red and gilded salon intensely yesterday on hisready-to-wear collection. Lagerfeld, who came to Paris from his native Germany at the age of 14, is the founder of preta-porter de luxe. His witty, elegant collections for the house of Chice (which he left on January 1) gave gloss and glamour to off-the-peg fashion which seemed - especially in the sixties - a more contempor-ary kind of chic than baute

Both designers have lifted the toile covers to their collections to show me a hint of what is to come. Karl calls his overlapping petals of wool crepe that unfurl in movement his "mille feuille" the alternative trouser shape—went under bold black and most often in his staccato voice is "impeccable". It describes the intricate cutting of wide side-pleated trousers, clean-cut draped wool jersey dresses and even the silk culottes boldly printed with the fan that is Karl Lagerfeld's trade mark.

Yves says that his new collection is "clean and pure", with lots of pants, cut wide and short at the ankle, and also with wool jersey for long tunics and for slim dresses, with hemlines just over the knee. His print is a dazzle of amethyst, ruby and emerald jewels on pleated-silk, exactly matched to a Jacquard weave sweater. His favourites are the tweed jackets, inspired by English gentlemen, cut with the precision that makes him (as the Grande Mademoiselle herself once said) Chanel's logical successor.

But it is Karl Lagerfeld who is now in charge of Chanel as well as his own collection. He fired the first bullet in his duel with Saint Laurent yesterday morn-ing, when he produced a lively Chanel collection which loosened up the famous suit silhouette by padding the shoulders, dropping the hem-lines and introducing a pretty slim skirt that wrapped at the tweed lining to a mac. Among a welter of other ideas, often piled on indiscriminately, were velvet collars and trims, Chanel details in curly Mongolian lamb and tartan throws. Chanel would not have been amused by the shocking Schiaparelli pink of her implacable enemy, or by the leopard-patterned boots. Evening dresspatterned boots. Evening dressing gown coats in a jewel print, were stylish. The irompe l'oeil embroidered Chanel bag on a black jersey dress was a joke left over from Lagerfeld's days at Chioc.

Best were simple long-long dresses in navy blue and Chanel

Meanwhile, at Chloe, the new designer. Guy Paulin, had all the right ideas but used them wrongly. He wants, he told me in his gentle voice, to bring femininity to sportswear, to produce tender colours and gentle fabrics to counter the aggressive trend of tough leather and hard-edged man-tailoring. Best were his dandy three-quarter coats in pale tweed boucle (an important winter fabric) worn with fondant coloured jersey in peach, primrose and mint green. There were jersey coats lined and bordered in fur, shapely redingotes and very long flat pleated skirts. Very much on the debit side were fitted crepe dresses in a sombre forties print and a transparent, satin bra, that was in embarrassing contrast to Chioë's traditional luxury and refinement

Claude Montana's coats were superb - big, bold trenches, cut with a kimono-sleeve seam and worn with very wide pleated pants that are an important Paris trend. His other coat was three-quarter length, cut from his usual baseball shoulder line. white sweaters.

Montana's sense of theatre never overwhelms his clothes. Thierry Mügler – or Megalo-Mügler, as the French press dubbed him – hired a rock stadium with 6.000 seats (he sold all but 14), and had a celestial blue ceiling to climax his collection.

Before the arrival of the Archangel Gabriel with a sexy swathed jersey dress and black wings; behind a shower of pink confetti the size of Communion wasers; and under the crystal rosaries which are apparently. Jones coming on as a star in his whose fabric studio is now the new fashion accessory, Mügler showed some good of the season). Colours were orange, lemon or sky-blue with white, or shades of brown from hot chocolate to ginger. Sonia Rykiel was in her element this season when the jersey fabrics she handles so impeccably are in all the collections. Her young, fresh show was a fashion guide for next season. There were the two new trouser shapes - the wider, shorter leg and the narrow ski pants. Both shown with either skinny long tunics or cropped sweaters. Her new skirt is midcalf, flat-pleated from the hip. Her new colours are lipstick red and violet, although she had none of the brown much favoured elsewhere. Her coats are either kimono-shaped or tailored in tweed, mostly threequarter while she played with the proportions of skirt and pants. Cerruti also played the proportions game with a swingy short trench over narrow pants and man-tailored three-quarter jackets with wide ones. Anne-Marie Beretta made the best coats in Paris in a strong season. Her personal vision of woman as Amazon was cut down to managable size in kimono-sleeved coats, criss-crossed in red leather or in a shapely navy trench with a cape effect on the bodice.

The dandy is the new feel for tailoring, with velvet collared redingotes at de Luca and some swashbuckling mixtures of red and green plaid with green

Donegal tweed.

Jean-Paul Gaultier, who is at the crest of the French new-wave, also had Dandy jackets, worn in a louche way with very long gin alley skirts looped across the hips. Gaultier, who is across the mps. Catalitate, who is atuned to young London, also had some splendid pointilliste knits, some bolder flowers and English hat designer Stephen

Elsewhere in Paris, where more than 60 designers are displaying their wares, there was a feeling that the show's the thing that matters more than the clothes. This season's collections, held around the little lake in the Tuileries

The Anti-Slavery Society in Brixton Road are asking black musicians to perform free of charge at a concert in the Royal Festival Hall in August to celebrate the 150th anniversary of the liberation of slaves from the British colonies. The London Symphony Orchestra - the only white performers approached to join the all-black cast - will, I am told, naturally be paid their proper fee. Surely some mistake? Not so. The musicians are expected to waive their charges in tribute to the black slaves' release.

"If they can't do it free, I hope they would charge a modest fee". said Society director Peter Davies. who tells me the big black names approached are American conductor Henry Lewis, New Orleans trumpeter Wynton Marsalis, and singers Laverne Williams and Willard White. The Society also hopes to cash in on the Greater London Council's Anti-Racism Year, for which a £300,000 budget has been allocated. If the anti-slave group do net their targetted grant of between £5,000 and £10,000, the Irish community may well accuse the GLC of ethnic minority prejudice. A concert at the Queen Elizabeth Hall next month, focussing on cruel Irish jokes, has drawn a comparatively paltry £3,000 from the council's race-related kitty.

An Arab variation of the coals to Newcastle syndrome is proving a lucrative business for London's auction houses. Shaikhs have started a fashion for collecting eighteenth and nineteenth century watercolours of Arab scenes by European artists. No Arab home, it seems, should be without one. Sotheby's, which sold £165,000 worth of the Arab watercolours in January, says a good Augustus Lamplough, worth about £300 four years ago, could now fetch £7,000. Bonham's, meanwhile, has resorted to desperate measures appealing for the works through personal columns in the press.

Free church?

The Unitarian and Anglican churches have now entered the great Freemasonry saga (see Bernard Levin on this page). According to the Rev. George Clabburn, Unita-rian publicity officer, Masonic recreey conflicts with the Unitarian commitment to freedom of information, and his views are set to be discussed at the church's annual meeting next month. More significantly, there are signs that the issue could soon be openly debated in the Church of England. One London vicar, who is "doing a Mason" and remaining nameless, has been researching Masonry in relation to the church. He promises that the issue, which he likens to "grumbling appendicitis", will be publicly discussed later this year.

Sidney Blumenthal on the misjudgment that may cost Mondale the nomination

The failed resurrection man

Mondale to go from one kind of inevitability to another. When the day of his anointment rolled around. the issue was still inevitability, but it was no longer victory that was He expressed disbelief that this could be happening to him. He had, after all constructed the most substantial organization, amassed the most money, collected the most endorsements. Politics to him was a subtle technical craft, and he had spent virtually his entire life learning it. Was everything he knew wrong? Gary Hart, his rival, struck him as something like "a Cabbage Patch doll," a "fad," whose politics were based on "hype" and "tinsel". But what appeared to Mondale to be overwhelming realities were not compelling the allegiance of most voters.

Mondale's politics have been commonly considered to be tra-ditional. His rise from the lowest level of local precincts to the apex of national prominence was a classical odyssey. Mondale's campaign, however, is in its own way every bit as novel as Hart's. Both are responses to the collapse of the old party system, where the bosses actually could deliver what they promised. Within the Democratic Party, George McGovern's and Jimmy Carter's candidacies were proof that the traditional party had

The essential premise of the campaign was to bend the selection of delegates to the Democratic to fit Mondale's strengths. To succeed, the campaign also had to bend the perception of process. Mondale's valuable resource was his Rolodex of contacts. He knew all the party people, the interest groups, the financial angels, the national political reporters and editors. His mastery of the Washington culture was complete.

Throughout 1981, after the Carter debacle, a vast network of lobbyists lawyers gathered around Mondale. In fact, almost every person in a top campaign position was a lobbyist, from Robert Beckel, the campaign manager, to Anne Wexler, the dominant member of Mondale's political action com-mittee, Citizens for the Future of America. Mondale himself became a lobbyist when he joined the law firm of Winston and Strawn, whose chief pariner is his good friend, John Reilly. As Vice-President, Mondale had served as Carter's legislative liaison to Congress, in effect his lobbyist. Carter had roots, Mondale had connexions. He was the outsider's insider. Like many liberals who came to Washington to do good, he stayed to do well - a phenomenon so common that the formula has become a clicke. The Mondale campaign was the Mondale lobby.

At its heart was James Johnson. Mondale's longtime aide, who set up a lobbying outfit called Public Strategies, Inc., at 2550 M Street, N.W., the same address as Winston and Strawn. Johnson lives in a spare apartment across from the office. His life is largely circumscribed by a few blocks on the edge of Georgetown. His intelligence, according to those who have worked closely with him, is Cautious early as 1981, he was using the word "inevitability" to recruit political operatives.

Johnson conceived of the Democratic Party as a legislative body and of Mondale's nomination as a bill that would be enacted into law. With the divisive civil rights and Vietnam issues in the past, the campaign tried of The People, Inc. And when he won an organizational endorsement he understood public opinion only in a hierarchical and institutional form. By achieving a consensus in Washington he believed he had achieved one in the country, by mediating among Washington lead-ers he would become the leader of American society. Mondale designed a party that would appreciate his special appeal.

Like Edward Kennedy, he had considerable influence over the Hunt Commission, which rewrote the party rules. By helping to shape the new rules, the Mondale campaign constructed a bureaucratic drama to drive the lobbying enterprise.

Its progress would be marked exclusively in quantitative and linear terms: number of delegates courted, dollars piedged, bumper stickers printed. The rest of the Democratic field was viewed mechanically. If the pace set by the Mondale benchmarks kept the opposition candidates low in press coverage, interest group support, and funds, they would eventually have to drop out. Then their supporters would have no choice but to support Mondale. No attempt was made to compete for the others' real or potential constituencies, particularly the essentially unorganized cohort of younger voters that came to be called the "new The strategy was to present the candidate as experienced in the byways and folkways of Washington and thus more effective. But the strategy had a subtext. It was also an ideology, a justification of the key Mondale operatives' status within

Washington By the end of 1981 the Mondale lobby was thriving and the candidate was emerging publicly. Jim Johnson started to use a new word: "chits". Mondale would compete against Kennedy in 1982 by picking up chits to be cashed in later. He endorsed more candidates, slept in more Holiday Inns, ate more rubber chickens than any other candidate. He was educating the party about the Mondale lobby. His appearances were tightly regulated by his scheduler. Rebecca McGowan, who exercised enormous control over his person and through it over his persona. The private Mondale is informal, warm, and humorous. But when some Mondale operatives brought up the idea of somehow showing this side. McGowan objected. "That wouldn't be Vice-Presidential," she reprimanded. Johnson backed her up, and Mondale stayed buttoned down.

If 1982 was the year of the chit, 1983 was the year of the straw poll.
On February 21, Mondale announced his candidacy, using the phrase "I know" more than a dozen know what I'm doing." He was running as the unabashed insider. seeking the restoration of budget cuts and the Washington players ousted in 1980. He didn't explain. however, what shortcomings of liberalism might have helped bring about Reagan's ascension to power in the first place. To him, Reagan was an aberration, a "radical." whose rise could be explained only by external causes such as the Iranian hostage crisis. Mondale's understanding of history was exclusively partisan; it has just one

In the spring of 1983 there was an ominous sign. Mondale, thinking he would pick up a valuable chit, endorsed Richard Daley Jr for mayor of Chicago. Daley ran the campaign of a front-runner and insider evoking the names and legacy of his father, buried seven years earlier. Daley lost to a black insurgent. Harold Washington. Mondale was disturbed; he worried that part of the black vote might now be lost to him. Beyond that, he saw no lessons for his own campaign. He moved on to more straw polls.

As Mondale marched toward victory, a feeling of resignation quietly grew among Democrats. He seemed to be the only available option to oppose Reagan, but he also seemed doomed. An NBC poll in Iowa showed that three-quarters of the voters shared these sentiments. Mondale fitted neatly into the story Reagan wished to tell, a story of big government vanquished and free markets revived.

On the eve of the New Hampshire primary, Mondale's dream-party was almost a reality. On January 27 one of his top aides told me: Interest groups, the Establishment - they're almost not there as factors. Anti-Establishment feelings don't turn up in the presidential race." Mondale had neglected just one group; almost everyone under the age of 45. In voting for Gary Hart. many in the new generation had a sensation of empowering them-The Mondale campaign may go on, but his phantasmagorical effort to resurrect the traditional party has failed. The Mondale lobby was unable to rebuild the old organization on a new basis. Instead it constructed a political Potemkin village. The real political organization of the United States in the 1980s is not the network of mediating groups, with letterbeads and mailing lists, on which Mondale relied. It is the gigantic web of electronic filigree. of broadcasting and mailing that the light of the state of and receiving, that places a tele-vision set in every inhabited space in the land. Bernard Levin: the way we live now

And finally, just before I reveal what all this is about, tell me what you would think if you read through the whole of the "Are you a Jew, judge?" book and found it to be composed largely of anonymous tittle-tattle about the hidden but enormous and widespread influence of the Jews in British life eked out by a substantial amount of the kind of stuff otherwise found only in the letters of those who write to me in green ink to reveal that the Archbishop of Canterbury is putting thought-rays into their heads from outer space, and to insist that I should stop him forthwith.

Very well, then; get another cup of coffee and make yourself comfortable. Then, with a red pencil for ease of reference, strike through every mention of Jews in what you have just read, and substitute, as the sense requires, "Mason", "Masons", "Masonic", etc. And now tell me what you feel when I say that, when thus and only thus - amended, every single word I have written is the literal truth. In Lewisham and Islington such steps have been taken against Masons; such daily lists of alleged Masons did appear in The Guardian; there is such a book about the Masonic nature of Jack the Ripper's crimes, Masonic muti-lations and all (the book is subtitled, with almost unbelievable insensitivity, The Final Solution); the same author, Mr Stephen Knight, has just written such a successor, called in full The Brotherhood: The Secret World of the Freemasons, in which he reveals that he did write to the four senior

does make clear that he thinks their failure to comply is matter for

As David Hume would point out even if I do not, it does not logically follow that because one group of people are innocent of the vile charges brought collectively against them another must be equally blameless; I cannot prove that there is no sinister international body working to take over the world with the aid of a plan called The Protocols of the Elders of Freemasonry. But it is worth remarking that the nature of many of the charges against Freemasons is astonishingly similar to that of many accusations made against Jews by anti-semites, and that the most virulent of Jew-baiters have commonly been Mason-haters as well. And anyway, what is the difference between a threat to sack Masons just because they are Masons and a threat to sack Jews just because they are Jews?

The point about charges of collective guilt is that they can never be disproved; if a particular Freemason can show beyond any doubt that he has never exerted, or been the beneficiary of, improper Masonic influence or behaviour, the reply of people like Mr Stephen Knight will always be: of course not. it's the other Masons I am talking about And since there must be bad men who are Masons, as there are bad men who are Jews, and some Masons who help fellow-Masons to preferment or gain, as there are some Jews who do such things for fellow-Jews (and some supporters of Tottenbam Hotspur for their chums, and some cat-lovers likewise, and some farmers, and some Rastafajudges of England, demanding to be told whether they were Masons, and ooh, I could tell you a thing or two about what Roman Catholics get up to with their sinister rituals like "Communion" and "Confession" and "Mass" - and some Glaswegians, and some nuclear disarmers, and for that matter some writers of rubbishy books), it will always be possible, on the principle of crimine ab uno. disce omnes, to make a number of individuals who have one, and only one, thing in common look like a single many-headed entity whose common element because it is wrongly used by some of them, is itself and of its very nature to be condemned.

When this practice is directed against Jews, it is called anti-semitism. When it is directed against black people, it is called racism. When it is directed against the uneducated, it is called class prejudice. When it is directed against strange old women, it is called witch-hunting. But when it is directed against Freemasons, it is apparently all quite right and proper, at any rate in the eyes of those responsible for the diary of The Guardian, in the eyes of those who write books to show that the Jack the Ripper murders were the product of a Masonic conspiracy and follow these up with books which suggest that practically everything is the product of a Masonic conspiracy, and in the eyes of those who control the councils in Lewisham and Islington together with, if this evil thing is not crushed now, many another council up and down the land. I do not suppose that Mr Knight's books and The Guardian diary are written with intent to cause harm; nor would I be in favour of censorship of them even if I did. But they are harbingers of a foul spring. And when it comes to the interrogation in Lewisham and Islington of council members and employees as to their Masonic affiliations, no doubt conducted by specially appointed Mason-sniffers like the Jewsmiffers of yesteryear, followed by threats of expulsion or dismissal for those who give off the telitale sulphurous stink, then - why then, I think, it is time for us to take down from the wall the weapons which we fondly believed could be left to gather rust forever, and lay about us with a will, going into battle beneath a banner embroidered with Santayana's words: Those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it.

Roger Scruton

Socialist enemies of the earth

When Sir Thomas More invented the name "Utopia" - meaning "nowhere" - he showed more respect for the sound of English than the grammar of Greek. But his meaning was clear: the political ideal which he described is not of this world; to which one might add, "thank heavens".

By the time William Morris came to retrace the steps of his saintly predecessor. "Utopia" had become a term of abuse. Morris therefore entitled his political vision News from Nowhere, and proceeded to give (what socialists seldom give) a description of the earthly paradise. its temper, economy and insti-tutions. The resulting piece of pieeyed sentimentality would long ago have been consigned to the "dustheap of history", had its author not established an independent reputation as a phenomenal creative genius, and the greatest cultural conservationist of his time.

The Institute of Contemporary Arts is currently displaying a rag-bag photographs, reproductions, films, sketches and collages, designed to set Morris's decorative achievements within the context of his social philosophy. At the same time, a conscious attempt is made to assimilate this philosophy to move-ments which are flourishing now, and which share Morris's ultimate purpose - the overcoming of all that is harsh and alienated in the human

Beside each page or pattern by Morris, therefore, the visitor finds some record of his supposed legacy.
There is one photograph of E. P.
Thompson haranguing the crowds at a CND raily, another of the massed resolute faces of his listeners; there is even a series displaying the "literacy campaign" in Nicaragua, whose main purpose, it would seem, is to teach the peasantry to stretch out their arms in clenched-fist salutes.

In contrast to those scenes of human progress, collages, quotations and pictures display the grim reality of Thatcherite Britain, whose people, oppressed by monetarism, industry, tower blocks, sprawling suburbs, unemployment and countiess other social ills (including inflation, lack of industry, lack of housing, compulsory employment) live out their days in groaning servitude. Every life-giving glimpse of Morris's wallpaper is paid for by a piece of this insulting propaganda, and every poetic fragment is neutralized by some smattering of semi-literate

The intention, one assumes, is to urge the visitor to embrace the same illusion as was embraced by Morris: society are uniquely due to the private ownership of the means of production". It would suffice to arrange the world according to socialist principles in order to usher in the golden age of dignified labour. The modern reader of News from Nowhere is likely to be struck by two features of Morris's paradise winch distinguish it from the average socialist utopia. First, everything is produced according to exact acthetic principles, by the most patient workmanship, and with a medieval sense of the validity of ornament Second, nature is properly tended. resources are guarded, and noise, pollution and squalor have been finally overcome. And if socialism could achieve those things, who would not be a socialist?

However, according to figures recently published in the New Scientist, the record of actually existing socialism" is far from encouraging. In France and West Germany, heavy industry emits into the atmosphere each year 66 tonnes of sulphur per thousand inhabitants. In East Germany, despite a lower industrial output, the figure is 251 tonnes per thousand. And in fact all the "socialist" economies are far worse polluters than their west European counterparts. So much for the benign results of socialis planning.

Strangely enough, the incrimin ing figures are reproduced in the exhibition catalogue. Despite having been written by members of the socialist establishment, the catalogue contains an article by F. B. Singleton, in which the author hesitantly experiments with the truth. The organizers manage to disguise the figures, displaying them on the wall in the form of gross rather than per capita yields of sulphur. Nevertheless, however DOWEVER inadvertently, the truth is revealed. Socialist planning is not the friend of the earth, but its mortal enemy.

The dreamy follower of Morris will retort: "Those are not genuinely socialist economies, but only 'socialist', in inverted commas". To which Michel Foucault once gave the perfect reply: "Those inverted commas should not be around the reality of eastern Europe, but around the illusion in your head".

Morris imagined that he could retrieve the purity of the medieval craftsman by undoing the work of capitalism, and like many socialists, he confused the inherent evils of industrial production with the accidental facts of ownership. Had he been closer to the spirit of Sir Thomas More, he would have recognized that the craft of the middle ages bears the stamp of human dignity, not because it was part of a socialist plan, but because it was the outcome of religious devotion. And if there is a lesson to be learnt from the ICA's half-baked propaganda, it is that Morris's socialism, which rushed into the space vacated by religion, can never fill the spiritual vacuum that

Mornings are worst - the place stinks. It is in the nature of prison cells the world over that the windows rarely open to the fresh air and it is a feature of British prisons that cells designed by the Victorians for single inmates are now crammed with the two or three occupants. Six months may be a period finely calibrated to lose an offender his, or her, job, provoke eviction from his accommodation or break up his marriage. It certainly is not going to give the prison service time to furnish him with a skill. The visiting area offers the most poignant moment of prison inspection. Here the institutional world of prison meets with the family life of liberty, in conditions of elaborate arrangements to keep them separate. Metal grilles and fine wire mesh bar the traffic in drugs on which prison warders wage constant war. But it also frustrates, with greater reliability, any spontaneous gesture of affection. One of my constituents lost a month's remission for kissing his three-year-old boy at the prison Sarah Tisdall will spend at least the next four months in some such institution for breach of Section 2 of the Official Secrets Act. A dozen years ago, when Miss Tisdall was still at primary school, the Franks Committee recommended Section 2 for extinction. Yet as she grew to womanhood, slothful government and pusillanimous Parliament permitted it to remain on the statute book until it claimed her as its first prison victim since the recommendation was made.

The personal anguish of Peter Preston, editor of The Guardian over his share of responsibility for her fate has been aired almost to the point of self-indulgence. I have listened with attention, but in vain, for the faintest murmur of regrets from the many who held relevant ministerial office since the Franks Report for their responsibility. through failure to reform this discredited and despised law. Her sentence perfectly illustrates the case for feeding Section 2 into the shredder which The Guardian has doubtless since purchased. The information which she released was of no military value, and of no use to a hostile state. The documents in question related purely to how this government proposed to handle the deployment of cruise missiles in a way which would put itself in the best possible light, and its opponents at maximum disadvantage. They were classified as secret not less the Soviet gained an insight into western press management but in order to keep them from the British public.

Doubtless every government attempts such manipulation, and coerces its employees into participation on pain of dismissal, but in doing so it is not entitled to the protection of criminal law.

Section 2 provides them with just that protection. It throws a blanket over any scrap of official infor-mation, whether classified or not. and prohibits its disclosure to any unauthorized person - by which is meant any member of the public.

Governments find such a provision convenient not because it safeguards the strategic secrets of the state, but because it protects their own political machinations. The point is nearly demonstrated, albeit unwittingly, by Chapman Pincher's account of the security authorities' reponse when he submitted to them the text of his novel about the threat of a nuclear warhead.

The only deletion they requested was the reference to the warhead production plant at Burghfield, lest it attracted a demonstration by CND. The anxiety of MI5 is revealing. They were concerned not to hide Burghfield from the Russians, who are well aware of its existence, but to conceal it from the British public.

This arrangement for handling information has a double attraction for ministers. On the one hand it suppresses inconvenient infor-mation. And by the same token it enables them to select which morsel of information they are going to share with the media. The fundamental hypocrisy of Miss Tisdall's case is that every week ministers release information of the kind that has put her in prison. The distinction is that when they do it they are briefing the lobby. but when she did it she was

Parliament emerges from the cpisode with scant credit. Our predecessors instituted the original Official Secrets Act in 1911 with only perfunctory debate. The nation was then in a fever over German spying and Parliament was assured that the Bill was aimed solely at halting espionage. In the decades since then it has become patent that Section 2 is not concerned with foreign spies but with domestic dissidents, and still Parliament has persistently rejected every attempt by private members to delete it. A hundred years from now, a prison sentence for exposing government news management will appear as barbaric as transportation for stealing a sheep, and just as incomprehensible. I trust that when such a time arrives the case of Sarah Tisdall can be remembered for having shamed Parliament out of its lethargy.

MORE THAN A LOCAL VOTE

For local elections to be considered an important indicator of a government's mid-term popularity, or lack of it, is not unusual. For them to be regarded as a crucial test of its legitimacy, as was the case with those held in Turkey on Sunday, is less common. The circumstances were, to say the least, unusual.

There was a general election in Turkey less than five months ago. Its results had been rejected in advance, by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe, as undemocratic and unrepresentative. That view was not unreasonable, in view of the restrictions on freedom of speech and association imposed by the military regime, and especially of the arbitrary disqualification of so many would-be parties and candidates. But it was, perhaps, a little premature.

In the event the election on November 6 did provide the Turkish people with a genuine, if limited, choice. The Turks proved this by voting for the party, of the three available, which was clearly least favoured by the military regime. But it remained uncertain just how representative the new Parliament was, since there was no way of knowing how people would have voted if other parties, which had been thought likely to win wider support, had been allowed to compete,

To its credit, the parliament itself arranged for a fairer test of opinion by ordering that local elections be held last weekend and that parties not represented in parliament be allowed to contest them. And, in the event, the courage of the parliamentary majority has been rewarded. The same party that won the general elections - the Motherland Party led by the prime minister, Mr Turgut Ozal - has also won the local elections, with almost the same percentage of the popular successor of the old Justice Party Inonu if that is what they decide and by its own reckoning the rightful proprietor of most of Mr Ozal's support, has come in a poor third with less than 15 per cent of the votes, according to yesterday's incomplete returns. This is an event of potentially historic significance: it means that Turkish conservatism, represented for thirty years by the late Adnan Menderes and then by his successor, Mr Súleyman Demirel, has now at least provisionally accepted Mr Ozal as its leader, recognizing itself in his blend of neo-liberal economics and neo-Islamic social values. The claim that Mr Ozal and his party are not the elected leaders of Turkey no longer carries conviction. Any remaining challenge to the legitimacy of the Turkish parliament must now centre on the opposition. not the majority. There indeed is an anomaly: the two parties forming parliamentary opposition, with nearly half the seats between them, represent less than 15 per cent of the voters on the basis of the local election results, while the main opposition parties in the country - the social-democratic "Sodep" with 22 per cent and "Right Way" with 14 - are not represented in parliament at all. The leader of Sodep, Professor Erdal Inonu, clearly has some justification for considering himself the true leader of the opposition, while the present leader of the parliamentary opposition, Mr Necdet Calp of the Populist Party, has ate left as Mr Ozal has of the moderate right. Mr Calp is pledged to resign in these circumstances, and his party is probably willing to merge with Sodep. It may not be allowed to do so formally but its members could hardly be prevote. The conservative "Right vented from accepting the de Way" party, transparently the facto leadership of Professor to do. In any case it would now be rather pedantic, and would not serve any useful purpose, for the Council of Europe to insist on questioning the credentials of the Turkish parliamentary del-

The legitimate concern of the Council of Europe will be to see Turkish democracy improved and consolidated, through the extension of civil liberties and human rights. That concern is shared, it appears, by the Turkish parliamentarians. Those who went to Strasbourg for the last session of the Parliamentary Assembly in January said they were anxious to make sure not only that the Assembly was fully apprised of Turkey's problems but also that the Turkish parliament was told clearly and directly what the Council of Europe expected of it. In other words they were looking for moral support and even advice from their European colleagues, provided that the advice was based on accurate information about, and understanding of, what is actually happening in Turkey. The Assembly, when it meets again in May, should respond to this invitation. Rather than turn the Turkish parliamentarians away it should welcome them, while making constructive suggestions about measures the Turkish government could undertake. Those most obviously needed are an amnesty for political prisoners not convicted of crimes of violence, and action to secure the human rights of those who remain in prison. Amendments to the press law will also be needed if Turks are to enjoy full freedom of expression, but they may take longer to achieve. It is probable that Mr Ozal will want to move in this direction anyway. The greater legitimacy his government now enjoys should make it easier for him to do so.

WORK FOR THE COURTS

In his struggle for the victory Mr Scargill refuses, capitulated of reason in the management of to the pressure and decided to (after public opinion) are the the area. Men who wish to work miners who want to work and no longer feel able, even with who recognize that an economically productive and well-paid stry is in their own hest interests. It was because the Nottinghamshire and Leicester-National Coal Board did not shire coalfields, under siege from wish to alienate the miners who were seeking to work, but who are also good trade unionists, that it decided last week that it "would not be constructive" (as the NCB's lawyers put it in court) to proceed with the action for contempt of court against the Yorkshire miners' union for defying the court order to desist him. from secondary picketing.

न्याति दृश

If the protection of the court were to be sought in this way, and if the unions continued to defy the court, the final sanction, under the 1982 Employment Act would be seizure of union funds. That might well create the solidarity of miners against the NCB which Mr Arthur Scargill has sought but has conspicuously failed to find. Mr Macgregor's preferred tactics of letting the moderates themselves resist Mr Scargill's attempts at coercion would thus be frustrated.

Since the NCB's decision to hold its hand in court, however, the resistance of the moderates has been steadily eroded by the intimidation of secondary picketing by miners from outside the areas where the local men wish to work. Yesterday, the Midlands area, vainly calling for the national strike ballot which the coal industry. Mr Ian come out on strike - pointedly Macgregor's most valuable allies asking the flying pickets to leave police protection, to resist those who say they shall not work. shire coalfields, under siege from the flying pickets and relying on massive police protection, will now be operative. Gradually the coalfields are being brought to a standstill by intimidation in defiance of the law because Mr Scargill prefers this method to that of a democratic strike ballot that he fears would go against

> In these changed circumstances, Mr Macgregor should reconsider resuming his contempt of court action against the Yorkshire miners for their defiance of the injunction against secondary picketing. Logic would also suggest that he should seek similar injunctions against other areas which have used this kind of picketing.

When the NCB decided to adjourn its motion for contempt of court, it made clear that the action had not been abandoned but was merely held in abeyance. Characteristically, Mr Scargill interpreted this as a climb-down. and Mr Macgregor would now be wise to ensure that his own wish for moderation is not interpreted as a sign of weakness.

against unlawful picketing, and

the suspended contempt action against the Yorkshire NUM for disregarding it, as having had some success in that a great deal of the violence has gone out of the picketing of the Nottinghamshire coalfields. The men there can now get to work. For the tempt action is apparently seen by the NCB as a suspended weapon to be brought into play again only if violent picketing is resumed. But what is to be done if, as a result of unlawful secondary picketing, the entire coal industry were to shut down?

It is a healthy instinct not to rush to the courts so long as there is hope that respect for the law makes court protection unnecessary. We do not, most of the time, behave lawfully only because a policeman is at hand to see that we do not behave unlawfully. But the wish to see the law heeded without court action is no reason for refusing to appeal to the courts once it is clear that the law is being disregarded. A law that cannot be enforced, or which those who need its protection hesitate to test, is not a good law. If Mr Scargill is allowed to close the nation's coalfields by intimidation, he will feel free to move his pickets elsewhere, to impede the movement of coal and the work of the power stations. That is why Mr Macgregor, the risks not withstanding, should not as a sign of weakness.

The Coal Board evidently the court. If necessary, the law regards the defied injunction has to be tested to prove that it is

FAR EASTERN FRIENDS

Mr Nakasone's visit to China puts the seal on relations which have grown increasingly warm since the Sino-Japanese friendship treaty of 1978. There is a natural complementarity in the relationship. China is the most populous power in the area, Japan the most advanced. China sees Japan as a major source of credits and advanced industrial goods and an ally in its drive for modernization. Japan sees China as a major source of oil and coal and a growing market for Japanese goods. Japanese credits quickly followed the 1978 treaty, and Mr Nakasone is now 470,000m offering (£1,436m) in long-term aid. Already Japan is China's biggest trading partner and is helping with the exploitation of China's energy resources.

Politically there are no serious problems between the two former enemies. They see more or less eye to eye on the Soviet Union, which reacted furiously to the 1978 treaty denouncing it as "hostile to the Soviet Union and fraught with danger". The Russians are naturally worried by anyone helping China but they were particularly annoyed by a clause saying that the two signatories would oppose "efforts by any other country or group" to establish hegemony in the Asian-Pacific region. While denying that this could possibly be relevant to Soviet intentions, the Russians insisted that it was directed against them, and they were further annoyed when China declared that it would abrogate the ancient treaty of alliance with the Soviet Union which declared Japan to be the common enemy.

China is not in fact forming an alliance with Japan against the Soviet Union. Its interest in Japan is mainly economic but it is also pursuing its own version of regional balance, seeing Japan as a potentially helpful counterweight to Soviet influence in Vietnam and on the sea. At the same time it is not wholly at ease with the modest but significant growth in Japan's defence effort. which has become more open and more rapid under Mr Nakasone, and more overtly pro-American. The Japanese leader, acknowledging bitter memories of the war, has felt obliged to reassure his hosts that Japan will never again allow a resurgence of militarism, while also hinting at worries about the future growth of China's power.

This caution also extends to the economic front. The Japanese are worried by the political uncertainty which still surrounds China's drive towards modernization. Japanese confidence was shaken - along with that of other foreign contractors - when China suddenly cut back on many large investment projects a few years ago. Mr Deng Xiaoping, the Chinese leader, has been trying to reassure Mr Nakasone. insisting that all Japanese firms were compensated, but it is only natural for the Japanese to limit their exposure while there is still significant opposition to modernization and Western influence in China. The whole relationship is therefore still somewhat tentative, hedged by memories and worries on both sides, but as far as it goes at the moment it brings benefits to both and contributes to stability in the region. If it continues to go well it could also ease the path of United States relations with China, from which not all stumbling blocks will be removed by Mr Reagan's forthcoming visit.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Fairer way with EEC revenues

From Sir Fred Catherwood, MEP for Cambridgeshire and Welling-borough (European Democrat (Con-scrvative)) Sir. Those of us who have spent the last six months in persuading our parliamentary colleagues to unblock the British refund of £475m are as entitled as anyone to find the European Council renouncing their Stuttgart agreements both on the refund and on the establishment of a permanent mechanism to avoid our wasting the whole of our negotiating strength on each year's refund.

You are absolutely right, however, that what matters is not last year's rebate, but a long-term settlement not just for a fairer mechanism of raising revenue, but, a far bigger issue, the quid pro quo of a limit on agricultural spending in return for an increase in Community revenues.

The £475m is, as we told our parliamentary colleagues, a totally inadequate lever to persuade the British Government to raise new revenue unconditionally. By the same token, it is a totally inadequate lever to help us to achieve reform, The only bargaining counters worth their weight are the permanent reform of the fund-raising mechanism and the limit on runaway agricultural spending on one hand and the desperately needed increase in Community revenue on the other. Anything else confuses the issue.

Yours. FRED CATHERWOOD.

Common aim

From Mr R. M. S. Barrett Sir, May I commend the interesting column by Mr Ian Murray in The Times (March 20) on the problems of the European Community?

It seems to me that a common philosophy and objective beyond national interests comes before figures, important as they are.

I doubt if MM Schuman, de Gasperi, Monnet and Dr Adenauer. would have gained the unity they achieved after the war if their aim had been anything less than a common heart and mind for the rebuilding of a shatter d Europe.

Yours sincerely. R. M. S. BARRETT. Haddington East Lothian. March 21.

A place in space

From Mr Julian G. Page

Sir, Your leader article ("Buying space . . . ", March 6) is correct in its communications satellites would have been more disconcerting without the knowledge that alternative methods of launching were available and I wish to defend it against the correspondent who criticized it in today's Letters (March 16).

He is correct in saying that no fault lay with the shuttle orbiter itself, but he is incorrect in the presumption that an Arlane launch would also have failed.

The space shuttle is most costeffective when launched into a low Earth orbit and because of this payloads intended for a geostation-ary orbit need an extra boost to enable them to achieve this. Thus they are fitted with an upper stage which is attached to the base of the satellite. It was in these upper stages that the fault lay and not in the satellites themselves.

However, Ariane is built to insert payloads into a geostationary transfer orbit directly with a continuous burn of the third stage, an upper stage not being needed.

Nasa (National Aeronautics and Space, Administration) uses two types of upper stage, the inertial upper stage (IUS) and the solid spinning upper stage (ISSUS) which is alternatively known as a payload assist module (PAM). So far both types have failed although the latest failure (in the SSUS) appears to be a manufacturing fault rather than one of design.

The IUS fault is a design fault and a fix has yet to be implemented. Given that all US payloads will be launched by shuttle in future it is useful to have an alternative launch vehicle in case of serious problems and ensuing delays.

Having said this I would like to point out that the large satellite market ensures enough activity for both types of launch vehicle and any serious failures would create prob lems with launch schedules of both shuttle and Ariane. Yours faithfully.

Uncomfortably off

From Mr Michael FitzGibbon

Sir, It is comforting to read (leader, March 15) that Sir Frank Cooper is "leaving Whitehall laden with a knighthood and an inflation-proofed pension and sliding into a well-paid job in the City". I have just retired and when I slide (without knighthood) into a moderately said second hood) into a moderately paid second career, I shall lose my Government pension altogether.

Both pensions come from the same ultimate source, the only difference being that I have visibly paid for mine over the last 46 years. Yours faithfully. MICHAEL FITZGIBBON. 65 Middle Lane,

Crime and punishment in Tisdall case

Sir, It was made clear when The Guardian were instructed to release the documents, and at Miss Sarah Tisdall's trial for their disclosure, that national security was not endangered. That is why section I of the Official Secrets Act was not employed. The issue is, therefore, how do we deal with leaks that do not threaten national security?

Since the Franks committe in 1972 condemned section 2 of the Act as "a mess" few politicians or civil servants of any rank have attempted to defend its sweeping powers. Franks said "its scope is enormously wide – any law which impinges on the freedom of information in a democracy should be much more tightly drawn".

The present Home Secretary, Mr
Leon Brittan, said in 1978 that the Act was "simply indefensible". A 1979 Green Paper said "the Government recognises that the catch-all effect of section 2 is no longer right". Even the Attorney General on Sunday described it as "an odd Act" - a masterly understatement,

You seem to miss the point (leading article, March 26) that one reason for the widespread condemnation of the prison sentence of Miss Tisdall is that it was imposed under a discredited law, the repeal of which was recommended by an official committee with the specific brief of examining it in 1972. (It is a shame that the Prime Minister's respect for Lord Franks's views of the Falkland Islands affair does not extend to respect for his views on section 21

Second, the recent spate of leaks demonstrates that section 2 is ineffective as a measure of control. The fact is that secrecy has become so indiscriminate that the genuine need for secrecy in some areas is no ionger respected

The Act has given secrecy a bad name. Even the First Division Association of Civil Servants recently stated, "to some extent leaks have been promoted by a belief that Government in the UK is excessively secretive by comparison with other democracies. This belief has some justification."

Sir. Lord Flowers states (March 8) that "the universities would warmly welcome an arrangement which could expand and enrich the work of sixth-formers".

Many schools and colleges have have chosen to disregard the value of the nature and content of such syllabuses and courses. Like Lord Flowers, we in this college would "hope that those responsible for admissions to undergraduate courses will pay due attention", not necessarily to an Intermediate-level examination, but rather to those well established and refreshing areas of the curriculum which allow students to "break free of the restricted range of subjects . . . Hair restoration

From Mr William Golding

Sir, A week or so ago in Egypt I had the privilege of an interview with the Minister for Culture, his Excellency Mr Abdel Hamid Radwan. Among other subjects the minister raised in the most amiable manner the question of the return of the Sphinx's beard now immured in the vaults of the British Museum.

He was at pains to point out that, unlike some other objects, the beard is a lump of stone without aesthetic qualities and only of use or value when in its original position.

The neck of the Sphinx is becoming increasingly eroded by blown sand and the centre of gravity of the head is now so far forward that without the beard and its supporting work the neck may crack at any moment and the head fall off. This literally colossal catastrophe would be laid to England's charge.

l most earnestly hope that the museum can find a way of returning the beard, if only as some kind of loan, and so remove at least one small source of international misunderstanding.

OBITUARY

SIR HAROLD SHEARMAN Educational reform in the London area

88, had a formative influence on the development of education, particularly extra-mural and adult education in the London area in the years following the war, and was the first chairman of the Greater London Council from 1964 to 1966, setting up its structure in parallel with, and then taking over from the old London County Council.

He was also chairman of the Inner London Education Authority from 1964 to 1965. Thus his enthusiasm for educational reform went hand in hand with a practical experience of the workings of local government.

Harold Charles Shearman was born on March 14, 1896, in Oxfordshire, the son of a Baptist minister. He began his education in Suigrave national school whence he proceeded by stages to St Edmund's Hall, Oxford, where he read modern history.

He took a post in a Durham county elementary school but soon left it for war service, firstly in the RAMC in Iraq, and from 1916 to 1919 in the RFC as an observer.

By the end of the war he was already a confirmed Socialist and egalitarian in education. following the creed of R. H. Tawney, whom he also followed into the Workers' Educational Association. In 1922 he made his only attempt at Parliament, standing as Labour candidate for the Isle of Wight After taking several WEA and university tutorial classes, he became, in 1927, full-time tutor-organizer for Bedfordshire and for Cambridge University, and eight years later Education Officer for the WEA, a post he held for ten years, thus helping to formulate Labour policy not only for adults but for the whole range of education from primary school to university.

From 1946 to 1961 he was Academic Adviser for Tutorial Classes to the University of London and in that capacity and as Vice-President of the WEA played a large part in the surge of extra-mural education which followed the war.

In 1946 he was elected to the

Sir Harold Shearman, who LCC, and served on its edu-died on March 24 at the age of cation committee which he subsequently chaired.

At this time the Labour-controlled LCC's policy for comprehensive secondary schools (formulated as far back as the Labour victory in 1934, but incapable of implementation until after the passing of the Butler Act) was going full steam ahead; it also predated by a year the forward development of higher education by local authorities set in train by the White Paper on Technical Education. Shearman, therefore, presided over the growth of the LCC education service in the following years.

In 1961-1962 he was chairman of the LCC itself, was a member of the UK delegation to the important New Delhi Conference of UNESCO in 1956 and was a member of the Robbins Committee on Higher Education. At that time his own minority report deploring the majority proposals for splitting the Ministry of Education in half and for instantly amalgamating the teacher-training colleges with universities was applicated by many education. applauded by many educa-

He was chairman of the Inner-London Education Authority's Further and Higher Education Committee from 1964-1967 and was knighted in 1965.

Shearman's two great interests in educational reform were, first, for equality of status and removal of class distinctions, and secondly for proposals that were practical politics in existing situations. He had little use for reformers who wanted to produce a new heaven and a new earth out of the blue without taking into account the feelings and possibilities of those who would have to: operate any new system, and the conditions under which they would have to work. For an educationist he wrote comparatively little, and though competent was not an inspirational speaker of the Tawney type, but he was an indefatigable worker who stood firmly by his principles.

He married in 1924 Frances Mary Jameson, herself a teacher, and they had one son. His wife died in 1982.

MR ANTONY BRETT-JAMES

Mr Antony Brett-James, who died on March 25 at the age of 63, was a military historian who was Head of War Studies and International Affairs at the Royal Military Academy, Sand hurst, from 1970 to 1980.

Eliot Antony Brett-James was born on April 24, 1920 and educated at Mill Hill School. He was commissioned as a Second Lieutenant in the Royal Signals in 1941 and served with the But by far the greater part of his campaigning took place in Burma where he commanded military history. He had however aircady begun a career as a writer, drawing directly on his Burma experiences with Report My Signals (1948), an account of communications problems in the extraordinarily difficult conditions in which the Burma battles were fought. This was succeeded by Ball of Fire. the 5th Indian Division in the Second World War (1951).

Brett-James was to continue to contribute to Second World War historiography in a number of ways: He helped Monigomery write A History of Warfare; contributed to the Dictionary of National Biography and Purnell's History of the Second World War and wrote with Lieutenant Congress! Sig. G. (with Lieutenant-General Sir G Evans, Imphai (1962).

But his principal area of-study was to be the Napoleonic wars on which he wrote a series celebrated 5th Indian Division of carefully researched books, acy gained from Brett-James's skillful use of contemporary SOUTCES and accounts.

Harrap as army of the period, and of the, perhaps, even tougher nature of the route to the top of the military profession.

Thereafter Brett-James produced a series of complementary studies, beginning with Wellington at War (1794-1815) (1961) which provided an absorbing insight into the career and habits of mind of a commander in chief through a judicious selection of his wartime letters, linked by connecting passages and notes. It was succeeded by The British Soldier 1793-1815 (1979) Europe Against Napoleon (1970); Daily Life in Wellington's Army (1972) and a number

Science report

Asthmatics can get relief from coffee, study shows By Pearce Wright, Science Editor

Asthma sufferers can obtain relief with a cup of strong from an investigation involving a group of young people aged from eight to 18 who were prone to bouts of breathing difficulties.

The study compared the effectiveness and the way the body absorbs two bronchodilators, which are the type of drugs that relax the muscles of the airways of the lung. One of the preparations was caffeine (as in pure coffee), and the other, theophylline (which is another, natural substance, but found in tea). For the tests, the two extracts were given in beverages containing precise prescribed amounts.

A report of the work by doctors Allan Becker, Keith Simons, Catherine Gillespie and Estelle Simons, of the Faculty of Medicine at the University of Manitoba, and the Children's Hospital, Winnipeg, is in the present issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

caffeine is such a widespread chemical, and is frequently ingested in food, drinks, or proprietary medicines. However, they say there is no information in literature about either the pharmacokinetics (the way in which a drug is metabolised) or the bronchodilator effects of caffeine in children with asthma.

Yet, as long as 1859, Dr Hyde Salter, a famous Victo-rian physician, said: "One of the commonest and best reputed remedies of asthma is strong coffee". In the light of this latest finding, a review of other reports over the past five years

One of the weaknesses of most of those propositions, has been the absence of any precise measurements to connect a particular dosage (level of consumption of coffee) with a particular disorder.

What the Winnipeg team have done is a classic study of dose-response relationships and pharmacokinetics. In other words, they have measured exactly what has happened to the breathing pattern of individuals. Dr Goldman says caffeine is the chemical constituent of coffee that is best known, and hence it tends to be linked rather readily to some possible clinical effects. Antique Jewellery & Portrait Miniatures:

Tuesday, March 27, 11 am, and 2.30 pm, King Street: Three miniatures by John Smart of his brother, wife and nephew were consigned to a paper bag in 1960 until recent exhumation for today's sale. Depicting Major Charles Smart in the uniform of a Deputy Quarter Master General of the Honourable East India Company, his wife Sarah Ann Barlow and Master Charles Kenworthy Smart, they are together expected to realise in the region of £15,000. A pair of miniatures of Sir Charles and Lady Helena Oakeley dated 1786 from the collection formed by the 2nd Viscount Bearstead, again by Smart, are estimated at £15,000 to £20,000. Antique jewellery on offer will include a large selection of stick pins.

Autograph Letters, Music Manuscripts & Historical Documents:

Wednesday, March 28, 11 am, King Street: Two movements from an unperformed and long-lost Mass of 1768 by Joseph Haydn, rediscovered recently in a family music album consigned to the artic of a house in Northern Ireland is the most important discovery of a Haydn work for 20 years. It is expected to realise in the region of £25,000. There's also a Conan Dovic manuscript of one of his best science fiction stories, "The Poison Beit," some 13 pages from the last Sherlock Holmes story, "His Last Bow," and interesting items from the hands of such unlikely companions as Beethoven, Louis XVI, Henry Miller and Florence Nightingale.

Silver, Chess-sets, Enamels & Objects of Vertu: Wednesday, March 28, 10.30 am, King Street: Kasparov and Korchnoi played a World Chess Championship semi-final with one of seven sets being offered on Wednesday. The late Lady Duveen's snuff boxes and étuis from the second half of the 18th century will also be offered, as well as English and Foreign Silver of which the highlights are a pair of George IV two-handled wine coolers by Paul Storr and four George II candlesticks by Paul de Lamerie. A collection of early Channel Islands silver and a silver-gilt cup designed by William Kent also feature in the sale.

English Furniture, Eastern Rugs & Carpets: Thursday, March 29, 10.30 am and 2.30 pm. King Street: When Christie's sold Lord Zouche of Haryngworth's Charles II ebony, ivory and marquetry centre-table from Parham Park in Sussex in 1966 it realised 500 gns. It is now expected to realise between £15,000 and £20,000. Also returning for a second time is a splendid George III satinwood and marquetry commode last seen here in 1947 when it was sold by Lord Mildmay of Flete for 1,350 gas. On this second occasion, newly attributed to the cabinet makers Ince and Mayhew, it is expected to realise in excess of £75,000. It has marvellous arabesque marquetry and inset painted panels giving it a light and graceful air.

Icons & Russian Works of Art: Friday, March 30, 10.30 am, King Street: This sale's most important icon depicts St. George slaying the Dragon, Northern Russian School, circa 1600 (est. £15,000 to £18,000) while among Greek examples, an unusual 17th century Cretan example depicts Christ enthroned, flanked by St. Sebastian and St. Laurentios (est. £5,000 to £8,000).

For further information on these and other March sales, call 01-839 9060 for King Street or 01-581 2231 for South Kensington.

ing had been revised. One could even be forgiven for being confused since no such generous package, designed to add impetus to the microelectronics industry, is being offered to the state-owned microchip company Inmos which is in immediate need of cash and was supposed to be the British flagship of the UK microelectronics sector.

The mainstay of last week's financial package is a £120m grant offered through the Microelectronics Industrial Support Programme (MISP) which began under Labour in 1978 with a five-year budget of £70m and was to lose favour in 1980 for about 18 months and have its funding reduced to £55m. That amount, the Department of Trade and Industry assures us, generated £250m of additional investment by industry.

These new monies, said the energetic Mr Kenneth Baker, Minister for Information Technology, when announcing details of the package, are catalytic. They would generate about five times that amount from the private sector, inspiring British industry to commit £1,000m to the microelectronics sector over the next decade.

The philosophy of catalytic money is highly questionable. There are a few exceptions but most of the prominent names in the industry are already conducting their own research into microchip design, are more than able to fund that development and would need to invest in advanced systems and designs if they had any hope of competing with overseas manufac-

That reasoning is not very convincing.

The information minister did British elements of the measurement of the measureme concede that the investment from the companies would probably occur anyway but at a later stage. But the catalytic money is meant to encourage the industry to advance its plans. That reasoning is not very convincing either, since the timing of such plans, assuming that they exist, is based on the need for that industry or company to react to the demands of the market. Whatever happened to the concept of competition, the free market principle and the independent entrepreneurial

Another anomaly is that not all the companies that might benefit from the MISP programme would be British. There is now a plethora of Japanese and American companies in the UK and they would be entitled to apply for such grants, if that were the case, and the government has conceded as much, there would be no award conditions to ensure that the result of such development be only used in British products or that British manufacturere should be given priority in supply. But are not Japanese and American companies in microelectronics employing thousands in Scotland and Wales? Are they British or are they classified as "The Japanese" or "The Americans" with whom we are trying to compete? One would indeed be forgiven for being confused, particularly if they qualify, as they do, for British research grants.

That is why this catalytic support, at least as far as large British companies and probably at a more generous level, than 20 per cent - the average funding under MISP - should be reserved for small UK-owned companies and those with obvious need for financial tionals to conduct research and development (R & D) in Britain and not just use their British manufactur-ing bases as assembly shops. Ironically we have already been assured by government on a number of occasions that this would not happen anyway.

The situation needs serious review. In Scotland alone there are about 300 companies in the high technology sector, The Scottish Development Agency is rightly proud of the success it, has had in attracting inward investment and has modestly played its part in reducing the high unemployment figures. The multinationals are equally as proud and sell Scotland overseas as Silicon Glen'.

According to the SDA: "Many of these have come from overseas and more than half of America's top 20 US electronics companies now have manufacturing facilities in Scotland. "Recent successes have included

IBM (A £10m extension to their long established Scottish operations), SCI Systems of Alabama, who are to set up in the next year and provide components to the computer industry, and the Japanese company Shin-Etsu who announced their £30m plan to manufacture silicon in Scotland."

Also National Semiconductors, the American owned multinational manufacturer, announced plans at the beginning of this month for a £100m project at Greenock in Scotland which will create 1,000 jobs.

Scotland has had its accolade and the explosion of the microelectronics industry there is a monument to the energy of the Scots and the Department of Trade and Industry. Even the prestigious IBM PC (Personal Computer) is being built for Europe at the IBM plant at Greenock.

The Welsh valleys are getting their share of silicon. About twoweeks ago

Sharp Corporation announced its plans to set up a video recorder manufacturing base at Wrexham, North Wales at the cost of £15m, creating over 600 new jobs in the process. That was the latest high technology feather in the Welsh caps. Nineteen overseas companies have announced their intention to create bases in Wales in the last twelve months, substantial proportions in the high technology microelectronics sec-tor. The expansion plans and the new company investment have amounted to £100m since last April. Inward investment must be applauded. It creates jobs no matter how lowly they may be. But if the object of MISP and other government support grants is designed to encourage British research activity which could not otherwise be funded then the philos-ophy must be re-examined We live in changed days from 1978

when MISP was first set up. Changed, indeed, since we seemed prepared to offer support to any organization other than the one in which the government already has a £100m investment. The confusion and the conflicts must be eliminated and such financial support that is made available must be deemed necessary and its benefits become the property of British Industry,

Shortage of skill to feed machines

By Geoffrey Ellis
The immense benefits from the use of new technology in the office could well be eroded by the growing shortage of suitably trained staff, proficient in the use of either dedicated word processors or microcomputers. This warning is given by Laurence Rosen. Sales and Marketing Director of the Alfred Marks Group, who also offers encouragement to those who seek adequate training in these new skills, by pointing out that rewards are tangible; for a secretary in Central London with no word processing skills, the average salary is £7,500; for a trained person, however, this figure increases

by at least £1,500.

leading staff recruitment agencies, the group is well placed to assess the current condition of the job market. The facts that emerge make disturbing read-The growth in the field of office automation could soon run out of steam, warms Mr Rosen, as the supply of sufficiently trained staff dwindles. With the estimated number of word processors installed in the UK standing at 30,000 last year, only 73 per cent of WP bookings are now able to be filled, compared with 80 per cent in 1981. In most areas of their operation, an unfilled quota of 27 per cent is unheard of the normal rate for other vacancies is still a healthy 92 per cent. The cause of this shortage, says Mr Rosen, is the deteriorating standard of education. Less able students find it increasingly difficult to come to terms with training in the new technology, many have dropped out of training courses when they find that their spelling and grammar are inadequate. As micro packages become more user friendly, so the need increases for com-

With the proportion of office systems vacancies now accounting for eleven per cent of all vacancies, an amazing five-fold increase from twelve months ago, Mr Rosen warns that unless more help is forthcoming from central government, per-haps in establishing a training board to cater for the IT industry, we stand to lose the benefits that should accrue from technology in the office.

One recommendation advises that chairs for operators and desks for the equipment should be adjustable and the distance between display screen and the operator's eye should be between 40cm and 60cm.

Eurocom Data Limited, Europe's leading COM (Computer Output to Microfiche) bureau and a wholly owned sub-sidiary of the National Westminster Bank wish to make the following appointments:

PRODUCTION MANAGER

CITY OF LONDON

Reporting direct to the Southern Regional Manager and responsible for all aspects of our busiest production unit, you will, in addition to the outstanding man-management, leadership and organisational skills, that are vital to a 24-hour, three shift system producing high quality output to critical timescales, possess an extensive working knowledge of the service hundred.

In return for your knowledge, experience and skills you will receive excellent basic salary, outstanding benefits package of the type associated with a major banking group, outstanding personal and career development, and the origing challenge of an organisation at the forefront of technological advancement.

SYSTEMS ANALYSTS

ADVANCED INFORMATION RETRIEVAL SYSTEMS

Eurocom has recently announced a number of Retrieval and general information Handling Systems, which are now being introduced within the UK. This continuing introduction of advanced software products creates a need for an additional Systems Analyst in both our Southern and Northern regions.

Reporting direct to Senior Management and responsible for the preparation of software products for both customer and Eurocom sites, you will be both highly self motivated and able to fit easily into a sales orientated team. A sound technical background is essential and will ideally include 2 years COBOL programming, a years commercial systems analysis experience and some knowledge of JCL and IBM or ICL mainframes.

Based in either London and SE or Manchester/Leeds/Midlands you will, in addition to an excellent basic salary, receive full product training, an outstanding fringe benefits package of the type associated with a major banking group, on-going career and personal developments, and where necessary relocation expenses.

MICRO FOCUS

UNIQUE PRODUCTS — UNIQUE OPPORTUNITIES

We are Micro Focus — one of the fastest growing software products companies in the world and already the largest in the UK. In 1983 we achieved a successful flotation on the USM and are now implementing an ambitious programme of further growth.

A part of this growth plan is the establishment of a powerful Management Information Services Department based around networked IBM 4300's. With this in mind we now have two key vacancies at our Newbury, Berkshire headquarters.

IBM SPECIALISTS

Can you offer skills in either VM or PROFS?

We are implementing both systems as the basis of our international information network. We therefore seek a specialist in each area to take responsibility for implementation and future development.

Starting Salaries £14k — £20k

If you can handle one of the positions and the package appeals to you telephone Ann Jackson on Newbury (0635) 33518 or write to her at Micro Focus Ltd., 26 West Street, Newbury, Berks. It will be a move you won't regret.

PROVE YOUR PROFESSIONALISM

I.T. Office Automation London

Founded in 1978, Xionics has taken the lead in the concept of open interconnection in office automation systems, with the result that within a mere six years we've become a real force within the industry, winning many prestigious government and commercial contracts.

So where do you fit into this pattern of growth and expansion? The answer is simple, it is precisely because of this growth and expansion that we can now offer you the following opportunities.

Senior Software Designer/Programmers £12-£16,500 Software Designer/Programmers £7,500-£12,500

We are looking for some highly talented systems people to fulfil these vital roles written our Development Division. People not alread to make a positive contribution to the design and development of Xionics' unique concept in the area of open systems interconnection, informarchitecture development and multiprocessor systems.

We are looking for people with good ideas and good experience in the programming of microprocessors, while a knowledge of LANS, word processing software, communicating graphics would also be highly desirable.

Design Engineers Senior Design Engineers £7,500-£11,000 £11-£15,000

For these challenging posts we require first class Design Engineers who have had several years' experience of logic design involving microprocessors. You must also have the flexibility to work in small multi-disciplinary project teams, achieving aggressive time scales white developing LAN. File Server and communications products.

Previous direct involvement with at least one of these areas in a product development environment would be advantageous while for the senior posts some project managment

The cost ofkeeping customers happy

 From Paul Rayner, chairman, Computer Revailers.
 Association, Buntingford, Heris: The Office of Fair Trading's investigation of the pricing policy of Apple Computer (U.K.) draws attention to a problem that faces all who use or trade in microcomputers.

A good dealer will always try to give sound advice to his customers and provide longterm support. The cost of this support, which includes training, installation and advice on software, is usually met out of the dealer's margin – which may be as low as 15 per cent. The last five years have shown that, with certain notable exceptions, organisations that sell microcomputers at very low prices are cutting their margins to an extent that they cannot provide effective support.

The Computer Retailers
Association represents dealers who are committed by their Code of Practice to sell in a professional and responsible fashion and to provide support to users. We recognise that some users do not need support and should be able to take advantage of discount offers. The majority of users, however, benefit from having a knowledgable and helpful dealer in their vicinity, All manufacturers including

Apple recognise this and are naturally concerned that cow-boy dealers who "take the money and run" should neither damage the image of their product nor the viability of the conscientious traders on whom they rely for sales.

● Professor J. F. Paynter, Department of Music, Univer-sity of York: Rex Malik ("Revolution in Education?", March 6) correctly identifies one of the major problems for education today, how to keep pace with change and help people deal with "the race to handle complexity". He says that he is groping, for if this thought has been previously expressed anywhere he has been unable to find it in the

May I suggest that he looks in the recent literature of music education? He will find the topic widely discussed there, particularly in relation to classroom music activities for the majority which place em-phasis upon creativity, de-cision-taking and the ability to use initiative in the absence of set procedures. A substantial ten year project (Music in the Secondary School Curriculum) funded by the Schools Council, voted a great deal of thought Health checks at British Airto the very questions Rex Malik

While I agree wholeheartedly with the suggestion he makes for the use of micro-computers in education, I would hope also that the developments in music education which have been taking place over the past twenty years would also give encouragment to Mr Malik. The literature in this field is now extensive - not only in English but in many other languages.

In the medieval Quadrivium music was one of the 'essences' ("unaffected by material substances"). Because its abstract sound-worlds are available to everyone, creative musical activity deserves to be taken seriously for the contribution it can make to general education. It offers opportunities for all school students across a wide ability range to encounter problems of the kind Mr Malik indentifies: that "run counter to learning routines of the past . . . and learning by rote."

 From R. R. Whyte, Bentinck Road, Altrincham, Cheshire: Some years ago I created a small trust with one of the well known financial firms and now receive on February 1 each year the sum of £500. This money is sent to me in ten separate first class envelopes. Each envelope has enclosed a cheque for £50. When remonstrating with the firm for their gross inefficiency they pleaded that the computer responsible written in 1972 and it would be too expensive to rewrite it: a girl clerk could earn her salary in the saving of postage alone.

HELPUS TO DEVELOP TOMORROW'S SYSTEMS - NOW!

Systems Designers is a leading computer systems consultancy based in the U.K. and operating throughout Western Europe and in the U.S. In 1982 Systems Designers became the first such company to obtain a full listing on the London Stock Exchange. In 1983 our profits before tax were up by 46% whilst turnover rose by 48%. Our achievements and high reputation for developing real-time systems have created many future opportunities for the Company. Tomorrow's information, communications and space-age technology will require sophisticated electronics and computer analysis/control. To meet the challenge of this expansion in advanced technology we are seeking high-calibre personnel capable of creative flair and who are highly self-motivated and capable of working in a consultancy

We are looking for applicants of degree standard, probably in a science discipline, with at least two years relevant experience in the following areas:

By Roger Woolnough With the softly-softly deliberation which usually marks new policy directions in the European Community, plans are being laid which could result in an important industrial resource being exploited far more The resource is information the raw material which research people, business executives and market researchers all need to develop new products. So far it has been available only to a few, but if the plans succeed, a relatively immature industry could start to flourish, and create new business opportunities in its own right. The target which the Com-munity's Directorate General

XIIIB has in its sights is the online bibliographic data base, which users can consult using a computer terminal.

Such data bases cover a vast range of subjects - agriculture, economics, law, science and technology of all kinds. Euronet DIANE, the Community's vehicle for providing access to information in this way, now lists about 500 data bases. But while this suggests that business is booming already. DG XIIIB if far from happy about the way things stand.

"Europe has a gap in the negative sense, and the gap tends to grow each year, says Dr Jansen van Rosendaal, the Community's Director for Information Management. Fifty per cent of the on-line information used by Europeans comes from the United States. and step after step we are losing more to our American competitors."

Van Rosendaal is grappling with a particularly complex problem, and getting Europe to co-operate in solving it is far from easy. This is partly only then will there be a organize pointeal discussions because the value of the market breakthrough to a much wider leading to recommendations for is, at present, fairly small.

When the partly only then will there be a organize pointeal discussions because the value of the market. Van Rosendaal sees projects."

Van Rosendaal: 'We are losing'

The European on-line bibliomarket excluding financial services such as Datastream and Reuters, is worth about 20 million dollars a year. Even though the annual growth rate is reckoned conservatively at 40 per cent, it does not come high on most people's lists of priorities.

Van Rosendaal explains some of the market constraints. At first, data base services simply took over the function of a printed index, putting referes on a VDU screen. Users still had to do 95 per cent of the work to get the information

Things have improved, but users are still left with 85 per cent of the effort. As a result, only experts tap into the systems. One estimate is that expert users in Europe number only about 350,000.

Extensive research is needed if the work of the users is to be cut to about five per cent, and

ing from that. "We have no lack of information in Europe," he says. "That's not the problem: it's accessibility.

What particularly irks van Rosendaal is Europe's reliance on US data bases. About half the annual 20 million-dollar revenue goes to America, even though much of the content of the data bases was drawn from European sources.

Data can have strategic implications, and there have been examples where access to data bases has been withdrawn from certain countries. This was because they did not provide input to them, but van Rosendaal points to the USA's growing protective attitude towards high technology, and believes that Europe's increasng dependence on the States for information cannot be a good

He also thinks that building and operating data bases could provide Europe with a new source of jobs, once the technology allows a move beyond the present-day elite groups of users

But getting Europe to agree on what should be done is proceeding at a characteristic snail's pace, with consultations, reports, discussions and recommendations. It could all take a lone time to resolve.

DG XIIIB is trying to stir interest by organizing pilot projects in such areas as electronic document delivery, electronic publishing and video Rosendaal is not trying to rush things at government level.
"We do not come with concrete proposals", he says. "It is such a complex matter with strong political aspects. For that reason we intend first to People/Chris Sealy and Paul Shimell of Micro Scope

"We had no products, no clients, no staff," says Sealy. What we had was a business plan. Our objectives were financially orientated. We aimed for a certain turnover in a three-year period, with a certain growth and a certain

Naturally, when the two men got together in the late seventies hey did have some idea of what they should do. They both felt the microcomputer gave an opportunity for them to create their own company. But they started with consultancy to see where that would lead, "Consultancy got us off the ground." Shimell explains. "If it was within our skills, we took it on. But if something related to the three-year business plan, we would stick with it."

Sealy and Shimell had both worked at ICT, a forerunner to ICL, Sealy on marketing and Shimell on the technical side. But they did not meet until a few year later, when they both turned up at Leasco.

Once they had decided to strike out on their own, the business plan was the first thing they tackled, "We wrote it quietly in the midnight hours, Sealy recalls. "It showed we had to raise about £50.000, which seemed a hugh amount of

The next tax target for Lawson's boot?

A tax reforming Chancellor of the Exchequer is likely to leave few stones unturned; for that reason alone the chilling whisper that Mr Nigel Lawson is examining, with a view to exterminating, some of the exotic tax privileges living beneath the gilt-edged market is almost certainly true. Most vulnerable to a crushing boot is the "special ex-dividend" dealing facility which allows buyers to take just one interest payment on a gilt held for a year and a day, thus effectively capitalizing the second payment.

The tax saving made possible by this manouevre, which can be repeated ad infinitum, makes it possible for institutions especially, who pay tax (the net funds) to behave more like pension funds who do not (the gross funds). They can more easily move into high coupon stocks, which are meant to attract the gross funds, out of the low coupon stocks which ostensibly are tailor made for net funds.

If the "special ex" is stamped on, it might, ironically, do something for the low coupon gilts which have become orphans of the storm since the great building society sell-off provoked by the Chancellor's revival of their capital gains tax dealing exemption. As the broker Buckmaster & Moore notes in a study of low coupon long-dated stocks, the market has become biased toward a gross fund valuation. The firm expects that bias not

The game would go to the "net" if the Chancellor did end the "special ex" concession. But it should happen for other reasons, notably the big boost to insurance companies' cash flows in the next financial year, as the changeover effects of introducing Miras are absorbed.

"Special ex" was not the only thing absorbing gilt traders yesterday. They were glued to their dealing screens, waiting and watching for clues about Federal Reserve Board moves in New York - and the Government Broker stole up behind them with a twinkle-toed funding move. He is issuing £500m of stock via three taplets £200m of Treasury 10 per cent 1987; £200m of Exchequer 104 per cent 1995; and £100m of Conversion 10% per cent 1999. First dealings in the new stocks will be on Wednesday.

The market's initial reaction was one of relief that the Bank of England had avoided issuing a full-blooded tap, concentrating rather on creating stock which could be eased into portfolios without the uncertainty generated, for example, by a tender offer. Sensitive areas and the 21st century have been avoided, while the choice of coupon for the medium dated taplets is shrewd. With no obvious counterparts, valuing the newcomers is made just that little bit trickier.

Cynical traders suggested that the areas chosen were where the jobbers were short of stakes. Ruder spirits recalled that Conversion 1999 sprang out of the Treasury Convertible 2/2 1999, or "Maggie Mays", issued in last year's election runup; they immediately dubbed the taplet, "Son of Maggie May", and marked down

The choice of Wednesday as the first dealing opportunity in the new stocks could be significant. It appears to turn the taplets into a calculated gamble by the Bank and the Government Broker that the US discount rate will not be raised. The Fcd has rarely, if ever, raised the discount rate while the Fcderal Open Market Committee is meeting to discuss possible policy changes. The FOMC met yesterday and will meet again today. Today the regular US funding programme starts, with the issue of a $6billion 4-year note: that leaves little time to change the

Octopus pulls out of Sharpe battle

Mr Paul Hamlyn's Octopus Publishing Group backed out of the bidding for W. N. Sharpe after the latter's board agreed terms worth 500p for each voting share or £36m in total with Hallmark of Kansas City, one of the world's leading greeting cards companies and also one of the largest privately-owned companies in the US. The Office of Fair Trading will take a close look - the combined market share of the two groups in greeting cards could amount to over 30 per cent - but with more than 120$ companies in the industry and the cost of entry relatively small, Hallmark is confident that there will be no reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, Hallmark, which was first named in The Times as the rival suitor for Sharpe, already owns Valentines of Dundee (bought in 1980).

Mr Hamlyn plainly did not like his introduction to the cut and thrust of a contested takeover. He said: "It has all been enormously time consuming and traumatic. Although I have learnt a lot over the last two weeks, it has been much too disruptive and there is a touch of Dallas in it all. These merchant bank boys might like it but I prefer to run a successful business."

Judging by the number involved he is right about the merchant bankers. Kleinwort Benson acted for Sharpe and would have acted for Hallmark but for the conflict of interest. That cherry went to Morgan Grenfell, which cooked up the idea of bidding for Sharpe, acted for Octopus. N. M. Rothschild, whose Sir Claus Moser sits on the Octopus board, was not too pleased but "Rothschild is still our merchant bank. Morgan acted jointly in the Sharpe bid because it was their thing", Mr Hamlyn said.

Octopus emerges with a profit of about film because of options that various institutions, including Sun Alliance, gave it to buy their shareholdings in Sharpe.

Going abroad to seek redress

As the British authorities grapple with the problems of investor protection, a new US ruling has meant that United Kingdom investors are better protected under United States law than under their own. And for it, they must thank a Greek. Precedent was established last November by Mr Psimenos that any foreign investor may take legal action against a brokerage house of any nationality, providing that the securities into which the investors were placed are traded on one of the numerous American exchanges. The action was against E. F. Hutton and concerned commodity trading on the Chicago Board of Trade. But Mr Ned Swann, a Harvard-education commodities specialist lawyer, says the new law would apply to trading on all American exchanges.

It was a significant ruling for him. He has been taken on to represent the 90 or so investors who lost an estimated $7m more than 15 months ago on American investments recommended by Bache Halsey Stuart, the brokerage house now controlled by America's leading insurance company and called Prudential-Bache.

The committee representing the investors met last night at London's RAC Club to be brought up to date. Executive members of the committee said yesterday that British legal advice had indicated a similar action would have slim chance of success in the United Kingdom.

In addition to the $7m losses, investors are claiming punitive damages of $200m which represents about two-thirds the net worth of Bache at the last balance sheet.

The action, being contested by Bache, alleges that a highly speculative and high-risk investment which represents a gearing of 100 to 1 was sold by Bache's London and West German salesman as a low-risk, conservative investment which would provide a steady income with the minimum need for constant supervision by the investor.

Salaries surge past inflation rate and 3% limit

Big pay rises for state industry heads By Jonathan Davis, Financial Correspondent

Several chairmen of national industries have been given retrospective salary increases for 1983 that are well in excess of both the inflation rate and this year's 3 per cent public

Other so far undisclosed government figures show that a number of key chairmen in the transport industry have just received salary increases of at least 15 per cent. They include Mr Norman Payne, chairman of the British Airports Authority, whose salary has been increased from £39,375 to £46,000, an increase of nearly 17 per cent.

of its business. The market's encouraging response-the shares rose 8p to 74p - Stems from three factors. The year figures are undeniably good though little better than CES achieved in its heyday in 1978-79. Second, the Christmas sale of the Harry Fenton. menswear change to the Burton Group, disposed of the reason for some of those broken promises.

Third, prospects with the exception of the Eurocamp Travel look bright if comsumer spending remains buoyant.

Ironically, Fenton had at last come right with much reduced losses, no mark downs and no redundancies - but it needed capital expenditure of £3m this year. Burton's offer must have looked a godsend. A chastened Mr Murray Gordon has no intention of going back into retail clothing in Britain.

Growth in profits this year will come from Salisburys which provided handbags for the women who shop in J Hepworth's Next chain - and Collingwoods, the jeweller. The fully taxed PE ratio is around 11, hardly a demanding rating.

Carlton Industries

A notable ommission from Carlton industries results yesterday was any mention of deferred taxation. The policy has been not to make any provision, since capital allowances were expected to continue to exceed depreciation. At the end of December, 1982, gress, the amount which would have been needed to provide for deferred taxation was more than £10m. Although the Budget announcement of a phasing out of first-year capital and industrial building allowances has sent most companies scurrying to their deferred tax account Carlton is apparently unmoved. Had the company decided otherwise, deferred tax disclosed as an extraordinary item would have taken a large chunk out of pretax profits of

Clarification, not heightened |uncertainty, is called for at a time when Hawker Siddley has made an offer for the 27 per cent of ordinary shares which it does not already hold in Carlton. The offer was made before the Budget and the formal other document should be in shareholder's hands by the end of this week.

The whole question of how deferred taxation provisions should be treated in the light of the Budget changes requires urgent attention. When a provision has not been made in the past but now needed there is an argument for treating this as a prior year adjustment and putting the adjustment straight through reserves rather than scarring the profit and loss account with an unwieldly extraordinary item. The frustration which companies like Carlton now face is easy to understand when it was the accountancy profession which encouraged the board not to make a deferred taxation provision four years ago.

The intricactes of deferred tax apart. Carlton has had a relatively good year. The battery market still shows few signs of picking up, the whisky trade remained quiet, and it was left to the bousebuilding side to demonstrate real pro-more than $100,000.

But that is not the point.

The 1984 American election campaign is turning into a tale of three deficits. Democrats' battle of Never in the history of American politics have so many candidates been pressed for such specific detail on how they

Senator Gary Hart (left) and Mr Walter Mondale: New Agenda versus New Deal

- have recognized the magni-tude of the deficit problem by declining to promise a balanced budget at the end of a four-year

This year, not one of the advocated by Senator Gary Hart differ little from the "new three leading candidates has promised to bring the deficit below $100 billion by 1989.

That is a reversal of the post-war tradition in which candi-dates routinely pledged their faith in fiscal discipline by promising a balanced budget within four years. Since President Harry S Truman, however, only President Lyndon Johnson has succeeded in keeping that promise.

A new independent analysis comparing the candidates' budget proposals with present spending trends revealed that programmes espoused by Presi-dent Reagan and Mr Mondale would continue the trend of deficits in excess of $200 billion through 1989. Senator Hart's programme, however, would significantly reduce it to an estimated $108 billion.

The key components of the Hart and Mondale programmes are similar - both focused beavily on defence cuts and tax increases - but the two Democrats nevertheless walk slightly different economic paths. Both offer clear liberal alternatives to the supply-side policies of Mr

Senator Hart, whose candi-dacy was not taken seriously words of Mr Henry Reuss, the former Wisconsin Congressman who coordinates Mr Mondale's until his decisive win in the economic advisory group, that "this is the most budget-focused New Hampshire primary, said in his fiscal blueprint last that he would cut monih. defence more than any other In Mr Reuss's opinion, the candidate, holding real growth ideas behind the specific budget to 3 per cent a year, largely by Hart programme which envis-jettisoning the big weapons ages the lowest deficit of all the proposals may well be the deciding factor in what is expected to he a structure live man chapter for the Democratic horizontone Interprets these

He proposes savings of $13 billion by capping and cutting health care benefits, and $9 billion from nuclear energy and synthetic fuels programmes. Senator Hart proposes dramatic overhaul of the US tax system to increase federal revenues. His goal is $104 billion in new revenues by 1989. He plans to reach it by capping the benefits of Mr Reagan's tax cut enacted last year at $750 for those with incomes of more than £50,000. This would raise £9 billion.

He would gain $45 billion more by deferring next year's planned indexing of tax brackets, except for low income families. He would raise $3 billion in new revenues from the 5 per cent surtax on individuals.

The senator wants to raise $35 billion with new corporate taxes including a 10 per cent surtax on corporate income and a lengthening of the depreciation on corporate real estate from 15 to 20 years.

In addition, to decrease US dependence on foreign oil, he wants to impose a $10 a barrel This is the bare bones of the

This is where the perceived differences emerge. Senator Hart believes the new deal is a tired concept which has lost its appeal, particularly to voters under 40. He is, therefore, attempting to stay to the right of the liberal line by advocating an unfettered market place and unfettered market place and strong growth incentives. The Mondale campaign implies that Senator Hart tilts toward producers at the expense of consumers.

Mr Mondale's policy of aid to ider industries and workers and protectionist policies such as domestic content legislation limiting American sales of foreign cars becomes an "indus-trial strategy" in Mr Hart's Campaign.

He wants more incentives in the market place, less inter-vention and an expanded role for the president in making America more competitive.

In the end, whether Democrats choose the new agenda of Schator Hart or the new deal approach of Mr Mondale, voters will have to contrast it with the economic message of Mr Reagan.

But the President is also aware of the public's deficit concerns. Without giving up either his tax cuts or is arms build-up, he has proposed a modest $150 billion down payment of deficit reductions now. And he suggests that if re-elected he would take much broader action later to reduce the deficits.

Pressed to elaborate on these actions, Mr Reagan declines, saying he will not throw up an unpopular list of programmes for Democratic contenders to Equally there was no dispute that copyright of those documents was the plaintiffs' and to publish them would infringe that copyright subject to the same public interest being a just cause or excuse for that publication.

The problem before the judge and the court was how best to resolve, before trial, a conflict of two public interests. The first public interest was the preservation of the right of organizations, as of individuals, to preserve confidential information. he courts would restrain breaches of confidence and breaches of copyright unless there was just cause or excuse for breaking confidence or nfringing copyright.

The just cause or excuse with which the instant case was concerned was the public interest in concerned was the public interest in admittedly confidential infor-mation. Right of tenant to extended lease

Duke of Westminster and Others v Oddy Before Lord Justice Eveleigh and

[Judgment delivered March 201

[Judgment delivered March 20]

The Court of Appeal considered the right of a arturn to the grant of an extended time under the Leasehold Reform Act 1967.

Their Lordships, in reserved judgments, dismissed an appeal by the tenant, Mr Noel Carter Oddy, of the tenant, the Duke of Westminster Lords, the Duke of Westminster and other trustees of the will of the and other trustees of the will of the second Duke of Westminster, were entitled to a declaration that the tenant was not entitled to the grant of an extended lease of the property. Mr Gavin Lightman, QC and Mr Jonathan Crystal for the tenant; Mr Nigel Hague, QC, for the landlords.

LORD JUSTICE EVELEIGH said that by a deed under seal in 1950 the second duke demised the property to a Mr and Mrs Farquharson for a term of 31 years, After prior assignments the term was assigned to and became vested in the tenant who from 1963 had lived there with his family as his main residence. It was admitted that the price paid to the assignor for the assignment to the tenant was provided by a company of which the tenant was a director, and that the leasehold interest vested at law in the tenant had always been treated as an asset of the company and that the tenant was a bare trustee who held the lease in trust for the company,

By a first notice in 1977, the tenant gave notice to the applicants
under the Leasehold Reform (Notices) Regulations (SI 1967 No extended lease of the property. The notice stated that the rateable value of the property on March 23, 1965 was £513, and on April 1, 1973 was

By virtue of section 1(6) of the Leasehold Reform Act 1967, as the rateable value was more than £400. Protect a person who on "the appropriate day" the to reside in a house. If an extended lease under section 1(1) of the Act in the present case in the present case. depended on the rateable value on April 1, 1973 not exceeding £1,500 or the rateable value at the latter date being adjusted in the manner provided in Schedule £ to the Housing Act 1974 so as not to exceed £1,500.

In 1978 the tenant gave to the applicants' predecessors a notice of tenant's improvements affecting the rateable value. The term granted by the lease expired in March 1981.

In April 1981 the valuation officer issued his certificate that the improvements would have affected the rateable value on April 1, 1973 and that the rateable value would have been £391 less had the improvements not been made. Thus the 1973 rateable value would have been less than £1,500 on that date had the improvements not been

In December 1981 the tenant In December 1981 the tenant gave a second notice of his desire to have an extended lease of the property. The applicants gave a notice in reply saying that they did not admit his right on the grounds:

(1) that he had not been in occupation of the property "in right of the tenancy, (2) that at the date of his notice the tenancy had expired and (3) that the rateable value in 1965 exceeded £400 and on April 1, 1973 exceeded £1,500.

occupying in right of the tenancy as his residence. He claimed that as equinst the landlord he had the right of occupation because he had legal title to the lease. In his Lordship's occupy as his main residence and if so how was that right created,

The tenant was trustee of the lease for the company. The lease did not give the tenant the right which he asserted to occupy as a residence, He was to be regarded as having the permission of the company to occupy. The Act was concerned to

If an extended lease were granted in the present case the company could terminate the licence to occupy. The Act would not confer any security of tenure for the tenant or preserve for him the use of the property for residential purposes.

The second question was whether the certificate of the valentians.

the certificate of the

the certificate of the valuation officer was retroactive to the date of the tenant's first none.

Their Lordships were concerned to determine whether the procedural down by Schedule 8 to the Housing Act 1974 was to be regarded as a condition precedent to the right to give notice by a tenant with a rateable value in the valuation list at the figure above the limit or whether that procedure was limit or whether that procedure was available as a means of determining the notional rateable value to be accepted by the court when it was called upon to adjudicate upon the tenant's cishts.

His Lordship found it impossible to accept the respondents' conten-tion that the landlord had a vested right to the higher scale if at the time the tenant gave notice the property was shown in the valuation list at the higher rateable value. Clearly the valuation was not conclusive fo the establishment of the price.

So far as the adjustment to the rateable value was concerned the tenant's right to that would depend upon matters which occurred before the rateable value was assessed. He cither had or had not contributed to that assessement by effecting improvements which had raised the rateable value above the limits. If he had done so then he was entitled to acquire the freehold on extended lease provided the other conditions

The notice was a procedural step which the tenant had to take if he was to call upon the court for assistance in enforcing his right to enfranchisement. It alerted the landlord to the claim and enabled him to inquire into the tenant's right at the tenant's expense.

In the present case the landlords' contention that the notice was invalid amounted to saying that although the tenant had now established the necessary potional value he had no right to an extended lease unless he could point to another notice served during the currency of the long tenancy issued after the rateable value was adjusted. It also amounted to mying that the first notice was of no effect. Schedule 8 was available If screenile 8 was available in necessary to determine that rateable value. Where the tenant was in a position to establish the notional rateable value below the lumits, even though he had not yet done so, he was a person with a right to claim the freehold or extended lease.

The fact that the notional rateable rate that the notional rates be value had not been established did not mean that the tenant had no right id certum est quod certum reddi potest (that is certain which can be rendered certain). Therefore the notional rateable value when determined dated back to the time of notice of the leaseholder's claim.

The final question was whether the second notice was invalid because it was given after the term created by the lease had expired by effluxion of time.

In his Lordship's opinion the answer to the question whether or not the tenant had the right to serve another notice could be found in paragraph 3 of Schedule 3 to the

That paragraph which prolonged the tenancy provided that if the claim was not effective the tenancy "shall terminate" at the end of the three months following the determination of the claim.

If the tenant could serve another notice either before the determi-nation of the claim or within the three months thereafter (which the teant's argument would allow him to do) he could defeat the express provision of paragraph 3 as to the date of the determination of the tenancy. The Act had not extended the tenancy so as to enable the tenant to serve another notice.

Lord Justice Kerr agreed.

It was plain that the object of the formation of the ALA was to enable the Labour Party view in respect of London government to be voiced in opposition to the Conservative view currently expressed by the LBA. An association which was set up in order to promulgate a view different from a political view was necessarily dedicated to promulgating While his Lordship had every sympathy with the reasons which led to the formation of the ALA, nevertheless, since it existed to express party political views, it was a politically motivated body and moreover, in contrast to the LBA whose majority might change from time to time, one which by its constitution was bound to be dedicated to the promulgation of the party political views of only one

It was conceded, and it followed from the scheme of the 1972 Act that a local authority was not permitted to pay subscriptions to bodies whose objects were to express party political views and, accordingly, the ALA was not a body to which the GLC were entitled to pay a subscription.

Hutchings' 5000 metres time in for drastic revision

Tim Hutchings has finally arrived. The former teenage subfour minute miler, now 25 has kept four minute miter, now 25 mas kept injuries at bay long enough to realisable talent for distance running, and his second place to Carlos Lopes of Portugal in Sunday's world cross-country championships here, indicates a 5,000 metres potential which could take him to an Olympic medal this summer.

A moment of indecision lost Hutchings the chance of victory. When Lopes broke away from Hutchings, Pat Porter, of the United States and Steve Jones Wales it was the first time that the Englishman had been at the back of the group. And by the time he summoned the will to react, Lopes was away to a marvellous victory, repeating the one in Chepstow in this race in 1976.

But, for a man who can run a mile in three minutes 54 seconds "I was probably the fastest miler in the field" – to run so strongly over 12 kilometres (77, miles) suggests that Hutchings's best 5,000 metres time of 13 min 24 see is in for drastic revision. yesterday by squaring the one-day international series. Having lost the first match in Lahore they won the second by six wickets, making 164 for four in 38.4 overs in reply to Pakistan's 162 for eight in 40. We are grateful these days for such small mercies.

As in Lahore, the crowd must just about have outnumbered those who watched the Test match on the same ground. The best part of 30,000 were present. In mid-afternoon, there came the only sign on England's visit of the stadent troubles which had been predicted, but they were soon over. Several smake hombs soon over. Several smoke bombs were let off, causing spectators on two of the terraces to stampede briefly but not interfering with the cricket. The match also marked the end of the Pakistan season. Their next assignment is in Sharjah, in a fortnight's time, for the mangural Asian Cup.

Yesterday, Saadat Ali batted through the Pakistan innings for 78 not out. Had he not done so there is no knowing whether Pakistan would have made more runs or fewer. Sandat is limited mainly to the Sandat is limited mainly to the backfoot and was slow enough to allow the middle-order batsmen little time for playing themselves in. In demands form-class cricket be made a prolitic season, scoring more runs than anyone else has ever done. His side, the House Building Finance Corporation, must make a nice mouthful for the commentator.

As is his wont in these one-day matches, Marks was usefully economical, aiming at the leg stump and outside it. With Taylor taking and outside it. With Taylor taking the match off, Fowler kept wicket. He took two out of four stumping chances. The fielding was adequate, the bowling as effective as it needed to be. For Pakistan's first wicket, Mohsin and Saudat made 76 in 20 overs, a launching pad for a better total than was achieved.

Having picked up three of Pakistan's first four wickets, Gatting then saw England home with the bat, for which he was made man of the match. On England's last tour of Pakistan he and another young colt by name of Botham used also to come in and win the one-day games. Fowler, Smith, Gower, Lamb and Randall all contributed a few; we had a final look at Qadir's wizardry and by half past four on a last, glorious afternoon it was all last, glorious afternoon it was all over. Poor Tavare the next man in, is still waiting for his second innings since Feburary 5. He, if not many of the others, must be looking forward

England return will herald fresh discomfort

From John Woodcock, Cricket Correspondent, Karachi

day with a rare victory, by six wickets, in the second of the two one-day internationals. The ieam - those of them that are left, that is - are due at Heathrow this afternoon. The post-mortems upon their return be more than usually searching. In 10 first-class matches, their only victory came against Northern Districts, on January 14, 15 and 16 in Hamilton, New Zealand. They achieved the unenviable double distinction of being the first England side to lose a Test series in Both New Zealand and Pakistan, Worse still, they face an enquiry into their off-the-field activities. If the charges of smoking drugs were to be proved, it would be a far greater disgrace than their playing record. Because of the failure of the tour from a cricketing point of view, the reign of Willis as England captain will, I imagine, be brought to an end. Tactically that can only be a gain, and as a bowler the stout-hearted fellow is not finished yet. Gower's start as the next incumbent has been interesting, and up to a point promising. His batting is also one of England's few great

Owing partly to the itinerary, which did not contain a single first-class match, other than a Test, after January 29, there were some fairly heavy casualties among among the batsman. The worst of them was Tavare, who, having failed to find his form in the early weeks, played only one innings in the ast seven weeks of the tour, and Fowler, had their moments without suggesting thay they are in the side to stay. There was a time, in fact, when Fowler lost his place to Gatting, who was not in particularly good touch himself and is not by inclination an opening batsman. In nine Test innings, Lamb made 160 runs. As England's regular No 4, he ought to be doing a lot better than that. I should like to see Gatting given a run there.

Randall had Gower's tour in

The England tour, which successful in New Zealand than began in Fiji nearly three Pakislan. He remains disar-months ago, ended here yestermingly ageless. Taylor, too, mingly ageless. Taylor, too, loses none of his spring or his will to win. He was excused only three days cricket on the whole tour, a remarkable testimony to his fitness and Of the bowlers, Foster raised hopes for the future. He also fields well. Cook is difficult to sum up. He is commendably accurate, yet that alone is not enough to account for the 32 wickets he took in his first four Teat matches. His patience is undoubtedly a virtue, but in the last two Tests in Pakistan there was not much subtlety attached to it. He deserves to be persevered with Marks, much to his credit, finished with three valuable Test innings. He is not, however, a Test class bowler

On his four England tours, Dilley must have been paid something like £40,000, for which he has taken fewer than 60 first-class wickets. No sooner does he seem to be slipping into gear than something goes wrong. Cowans comes on slowly. But the truth of the matter is that England are deperately short of available cricketers of authentic, or even potential, Test class. The most heartening aspect of the tour, in a collective sense, was the spirit shown in the second Test match against Pakistan, when England suddenly found themselves without Willis and Botham. There was a real feeling then of a side putting its best foot forward. The shortage of top class cricketers, let alone those who are larger than life, being as acute as it is, Botham's return, fit and refreshed, is important. So is Willis's. At Faisalabad, though, England showed what teamwork will achieve, when the stars have departed. And so to the manager's report. If Mr Smith has had his cye on the ball, as I am sure he has, it should contain the ashes to the questions, or most of them, which are now being asked, at Lord's, over and over

What, if anything, has been going on in private which might warrant some really swinging punishment? How extensive a shake-up or clear-out really is needed? Is too much being asked of the players by never giving them a winter off? How can the itineraries for such tours as this be improved? And would an insistence on the former standards of appearance be reflected in a tidier performance on the field? As the man in charge of the tour, as well as being an England selector and a member of the executive committee of the Test and County Cricket Board, Alan Smith will have everyone's attention upon his return. He is not an instinctively expansive person, but now is the time for holding nothing back. No one could have taken the managers job more seriously, and no manager's report can ever have been more keenly or anxiously Smith: centre of attention. awaited.

Torvill and Dean: royalty in tracksuits

The ice dance is ended but the melody lingers on

It is a sad occasion to say farewell to Jayne Torvill and Christopher Dean after their towering contributions to the world of ice dance. They have brought their own particular art to such a pitch of perfection that one has been almost embarrassed to attempt an assessment of the riches they have placed before us over the last four years, particularly with their interpretation this season of Ravel's Bolero.

Sterile argument

It reawakened the debate whether or not ice dance should be regarded as a sport at all: a sterile argument, it seems to me, with no hope of one protagonist convincing his opponent. The fact is that the International Skating Union and the Inter-national Olympic Committee regard it as such, with the result that its proper place is surely in the sports section, for all the difficulties that the expertise of Torvill and Dean have place upon journalists more used to totting up goals and tries, measuring time and motion.

Henceforth the definition is clear so far as they are concerned, and we shall lament their defection from our little corner of the parish. I doubt if any other two champions have had the impact of this modest couple from Nottingham. The Sports Writers' Association, who ordinarily are perfectly at home with the whiff of sweat and embrocation, have regularly installed them as the team of the year. The public have acclaimed them in a way that has elevated them almost to the stature of royalty in tracksuits.

Faint hearts

Who could have thought that two people with no known trace of artistry in their genes could have so transformed a sport inhabited by people for the most part steeped in artistic pursuits? There were faint hearts among us, not excluding The Times, who wondered back in 1981, when they pnexpectedly won their first world title, whether or not they could possibly stay the course for three more years.

Against their modest family backgrounds, how could we have foreseen that they would have

Broadway musical (Mack and Mabel) and chereograph it themselves to such charming purpose in 1982? Or that the circus of Phineas Barnum could have provided a suitable setting last year? Or that the insistent single rhythm of Bolero could have been the means of creating quite magical atmosphere during the winter Olympics last

Side by side with these creations they produced original set pattern dances of such originality that any would-be challengers to their title were never given a chance. They went for musical inspiration not only to Gershwin and Ellington but also to Paganini and Rimsky-Korsakov, as well as Ravel, of course, when others were still keyed in only to Berlin and

Strongest arm

Under their dynamic leader-ship, ice dance has become incomparably the strongest arm of the International Skating Union, attracting more entries and commanding greater public support. It has become regular practice now for every championship to ring down the curtain with the ice dance final. With it all - and perhaps it is their finest achievement - they

their finest achievement – they have conducted themselves in a way that brings pride not only to Nottingham, whose city fathers had the wisdom to invest in their talent, but to the country as a whole. And even beyond.

Public interest

In Ottawa last week it almost seemed that Torvill and Dean might have been Canadians, such has been the degree of publicity and public interest. It is said that you could sell all the marathon is one of the most painful toffee apples you could produce in Nottingham provided they could be prevailed upon to lick them first. Candy Apples, here in Ottawa, would surely also be in such prolific demand.

in Ottawa, would surely also be in such prolific demand.

Their professional plans are so far undisclosed but one can safely make one assumption—that they will not follow the last three holes of the final round of the New Orleans classic, in which the Californian, Bob Eastwood, aged 38, held his lead to win the first tournament of that they will not follow the safely make one assumption -that they will not follow the berd. Too many oil rigs need not spoil the cooking

The days of gracious living are still with us if one is to take at face value an estate agent's handout which currently advertises a fully fur-nished fishing lodge in the foothills of Wester Ross, to be let, with fine salmon and sea trout fishing, on a weekly tenancy. Far away over the mountains, 60-odd miles from the nearest town, the lodge sleeps up to 17.

Whether that means 17 bedroo we are not told; but it would not be surprising, for many such places held the sporting house parties of the Edwardian upper classes, who were entertained by the lairds on a lavish scale, with several crowned heads among them. It is a grandeur emphasised even these days by the estate agent's advice that "most tenants bring up their own cook". That could raise problems. Most salmon fisherman in our egalitarian times travel without cooks. They may not even know a cook, and only have caught a brief glimpse of one, white-hatted, through a restuarant's service doors. Not we imagine, are there many cordon bleaus presently at work in the boardroom kitchens Gregarious fisherman with a fancy for the remotest parts of Wester Ross, one of the most instance, are of no real use.

Hampers of Fortnum's game pies and tins of Campbell's meat balls can add to the anticipation as convoys of crowded and overloaded estate cars make their way north.

The rewards will be many, if not delights luncheon on game pie on the river bank to the sound of an the river bank to the sound of an orchestra of oyster catchers, the sight of eagles the breath of air unknown to those who have experienced only that of the cities. Such things bring their own rewards, as do the malt whisky and the pear fires of an evening, and the long days and the light nights of Highland summers, There will be few people about perhaps an elderly ghilly or a caretaker, but that will be ghilly or a caretaker, but that will be all - and it will suddenly dawn on you why the glens are empty and why the estate has no cooks of its own. They are all away on the nearest eil rig, doing fine.

The moment that may have cost Solihull the championship came midway through the last period. A Budz goal which would have leveled the score at 7-7 was disallowed, and Taylor, Solihull's player-coach, vented his frustration on Cox, the Southampton Southampton scored twice while Solihull's challenge has faltered since they lost Skrudland on a lengthy suspension. Legal Appointments

LEGAL VACANCIES

As a result of internal reorganisation, the following vacancies have arisen in the Council's busy legal section, forming part of the Chief Executive Officer's Department. A full range of legal services is provided for elected Members and departmentally.

SOLICITORS (Up to £14,316 per annum)

We are seeking to make two appointments of admitted staff. The first, where good local government experience will be necessary will be involved or undertaking projects at the highest level, supervising the work of other qualified and unqualified staff and appearing as the Council's representative before Courts and at Inquiries. The more junior post, attracting a salary commensurate with experience would be suitable for a less experienced solicitor seeking to expand his or her role in advisory work (including presenting reports to Committee) and supervision of staff involved in conveyancing and common law functions.

SENIOR LEGAL EXECUTIVE (Up to £12,369 per annum)

Previous local government experience, whilst desirable, is not essential for this post but the successful applicant must be capable of undertaking the more complex conveyancing and higation matters, attending Committee meetings and supervising junior staff, He or she will act with a large degree of independence.

LEGAL EXECUTIVE (Up to £8,994 per annum)

To fill this vacancy we are seeking someone who has made significant progress towards (LLE, qualifications and who can make a positive contribution in the Etigation or conveyancing area.

 UNDER THE HAMMER (BBC 1, 9.25pm), Stephen Fagan's comedy about the inciplently lunatic tringe of the fine arts world, has a hidden joke in the title. Add the worlds "and sickle" and you get the Russian dimension that assumes a greater degree of importance as the climax approaches. A Van Gogh, put up for sale by the Russians at a London callery is quite possitive. tor sale by the Russians at a London gallery is quite possibly a fake. Confirm it and the gallery loses face, especially as the Princess of Wales is about to call. But there is a second drama afoot. The gallery's head porter has accidentally put his foot through the Van Gooh. The hammaring foot.

accountary but his toot through the Van Gogh. The hammering (not to mention the sickling) from the Russians, if the awful truth gets out, could unleash a cultural cold war. This is a wholly deligitful and dotty play, much euriched by the performances of James Maxwell ocumentary THE FOOD WAR (ITV, 10.30pm) has Washington and Brussels baring their teeth at one another over a mountain of grain, across hillocks of butter and takes across hillocks of butter and takes of milk. To anyone not varsed in the ways of political economy, it all adds up to farce. But, as in all the best farces, traged is waiting in the wings, and in tonight's film tragedy is represented in the drautier pictures of hungry eyes in drought areas like southern Africa. On the basis of a sample of 170,000 votes, Señor Duarte said his Christian Democrat party had won 45 per cent, the Republican Nationalist Alliance (Arena) 27 per cent and the establishment National Conciliation Party 20 per cent.

Major D'Aubuisson, Arena candidate, remained uncharacteristically silent after the voting, indicating Senor Duarte's initial estimates to be accurate. The final result will not be known until tomorrow.

Because of guerrilla and other disruption, it is believed that between a third and a half of those eligible were unable to bit risky, but I took it round on the evening of October 21 and I was aware that there was a big CND march planned for the next morning and to have the full impact that memo needed to be published in the paper on the Saturday

She said her views on ministers proper scrutiny by Parliament and on matters concerning Britain's nuclear armament were ker own business. The programme commentary said the paper published the story in time for the march and later the text of the memo. Then, in a court case, it was made to hand back

"The internal investigation then knew from which photocopier the document concerned had come. Fortunately a lot of people use that photocopier, myself included.

"Then they handed things over to the police, and then things really started botting up. And we were all fingerprinted and then we were all

Sarah Tisdall: I made the decision that on the Monday morning i would go in and give myself up to the police, because at that stage I still had not told my parents and the rest of the family a bet I had done

So I told them over the weekend, which wasn't a pleasant thing to have to do, and then I went into the police on the Monday morning. Asked what were the major factors that had influenced her.

"One, that things were obviously hotting up, and I didn't really want to be dragged out of bed at 4 o'clock one morning by a burly great policeman; I didn't want my parents to find out what I had done through and I didn't want my colleagues to have to go through what I had to go through that Friday afternoon." She then answered a series of mestions for World in Action on her views on current issues, saying she acted partly out of political disenchantment with the present

"It would be best that I tell them

"I felt that I had been let down as a voter; the policies that were being implemented both in my work situation and outside my work struction and outside my work situation were having a detrimental effect – the cuts, the cuts in health, the cuts in education, and spending large amounts of money on weapons

but that's a personal opinion because it resulted in my arrest.
What do you think The Guardian should have done? — Well, I think they should have broken the law. Now that's a fairly hairy thing to say on television. I think they should have destroyed the docu-ment and then have told the Government that they had de-stroyed the document some time

Even makulatura is open to abuse, however, as the paper Rural Life recently revealed. It described how a 30 yearold rowing coach in Saratov -the kind of fine young man who ought to be a shining example of socialist morality had taken to stealing newspapers and magazines systematically from mail boxes in the lobbies of blocks of flats. He got away with it because he was well dressed and respectable, and accumulated quite a collection of highly prized books (many of them upavai-lable in the shops) before being caught red-handed
